State says UK forest not a park

1986 permit, the state declared yesterday.

In a letter dated Aug. 27, the Department for Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement said that Robinson Forest, which is used for forestry research, was not a park when Arch, operated near the forest. The letter deferred ruling on public park status pertaining to Arch's current request to mine within the forest. The St. Louis-based company owns the mineral rights to two tracts of land in the forest.

Arch wants to mine the land because it is more economically recoverable than the land UK has offered in trade negotiations.

The state, which already cited Arch on two violations under the 1986 permit, sided with Arch saying that the company was not in violation of strip mining laws when it mined land within 300 feet of UK tion of strip mining laws when it mined land within 300 feet of UK property.

Strip mining laws prohibit mining within 300 feet of a public park.

The letter, from department commissioner William J. Grable, stated that UK made no attempt to assent that the forest was a park during the review process held before the permit was issued in 1986.

The letter cited a 1984 letter from Bart Thielges, the former chairman of UK's foresty department, that called the forest as a park.

Thielges 1984 letter made no reference to the forest as a park.

Thielges 1984 letter made no reference to the forest as a park.

Thielges 1984 letter made no reference to the forest as a park.

UK claims that the research forest is a public park, with hiking trails and horseback riding.

But Arch attorney Blair Gardner says those claims are "bogus" and said that the forest "has minimate recreational use" and is "padlocked.

"The University simply doesn't have a park, 'Gardner said.

Although the state could rule that forest is a park in considering the permit request, Arch officials believe this ruling will foretell the next.

"I see no basis, when it comes time to make a ruling (on the permit) for a change," Gardner said.
"It means that we will be able mine all of our property adjacent to the University's property" if the state grants the permit, Gardner said.

said.

In a "non-technical, non-legal" sense this would act as a precedent when the state rules on the permit, which Arch is secking in order to mine about 105 forest acres, Gardner said.

The permit Arch secks concerns two tracts of land within the torest's Clemons Fork watershed, which is used in UK forestry research primarily because of its purity.

Many UK officials claim that mining in this area would damage the watershed, and harm the research projects UK owns the land, but Arch leases the mineral rights.

UK and three leading environmental groups have threatened to block Arch's recent application to mine by having the forest declared unsuitable for mining. A hearing on the issue is scheduled for mid-December in Jackson, Ky.

Yesterday's decision is not a surprise and it does not affect University strategy, UK officials said.

UK Associate General Counsel and UK raised the question of Robinson Forest as a park in two contexts and this ruling only affects one.

Van Booven said this ruling answers the questions raised by the University in an Aug. I letter to the department concerning the forcement" of the old permit.

He said that the questions UK raised about Robinson Forest as a park in the "permitting" context and this ruling answers the questions raised by the department concerning the forcement" of the old permit.

He said that the questions UK raised about Robinson Forest as a park in the "permitting" context have not been answered.

UK officials have not received the letter, and have not discussed whether they will appeal the state's ruling. UK spokesman Bernie Vonderheide said.

AN UNCERTAIN FUTURE

Fear, prejudice part of agenda for Iraqi student

By JAMES TEISER Staff Writer

Ali Al-Yazdi's perspective on the current crisis in the Persian Gulf is a little different than that of most UK students.

Al-Yazdi, a 24-year-old geophysics graduate student, thinks more about his safety than how high prices will climb at the gas pump. He has to shrugh off the anti-Arable jokes that pop up occasionally and at times, despite UK's efforts to internationalize the campus, ruly feels like an outsider.

But that's what happens to most Iraqi citizens who live in the United States. The daily battless they face stem not from military personnel or a hot, desert sun, but from fear and prejudice from their community.

"Being Middle Eastern, a lot of people look at you and think that you are one part of the problem," Al-Yazdi said. "Sometimes in the airport or on the border in Canada, you're not just questioned, you're niteriogated. They search everything you have."

Al-Yazdi, sworries aren't limited. He is concerned about what the United States plans to do in wake of Iraq's decision almost one month ago to make neighboring, oil-rich Kuwait a province.

He is also concerned about himself.

Al-Yazdi, who is president of a chemical company he helbed start here in Lexington, said that the Gulf oil-rich Kuwait a province.

He is also concerned about himself.

Al-Yazdi, who is president of a chemical company he helped start here in Lexington, said that the Gulf crisis has already affected his business.

"I personally have lost some business because of the situation. We are working to establish factories in the Middle East. ... and we re also selling high-tech equipment in the Middle East. But because of this situation, everything was stopped, "Al-Yazdi said.

The kind of prejudice Al-Yazdi believes he faces is one thing UK officials are hoping won't surface.

"Tm hoping that Americans, number one, don't inhicit these kinds of things on any Iraqi sudents they may meet, and number two, don't generalize what they think are Arab characteristics," said Chris Musick, program director for International Students and Scholars office.

Robert Hemenway, Chancellor for the Lexington campus, believes the school's "well-deserved reputation" for tolerance and understanding of all cultures and peoples "would be manifest in this situation as well."

Parking spots hard to find in student lots

By ANGELA JONES Contributing Writer

Sonatching a parking space minutes before class may ensure your being on time and may even preserve your sanity, but more than likely, it also means getting a parking teket.

There are 9,996 parking spaces awaiting about 23,000 students every morning, but Don Thornton, assistant director of parking and transportation, said his office is "trying our best to accommodate everyone."

Last year, UK patrol officers issued 4,303 parking citations in the last 10 days of August and 6,080 for September, Thornton said.

Statistics for this August will be available Sept. 13, he said.

"It's always this way for a couple of weeks when school starts — this year isn't any different," Thornton said.

The parking and transportation department has gone high-tech with a new computer system that lakes short cuts processing ticket information —getting a parking citation made fast and error-free, according to Don Thornton, assistant director for parking and transportation.

Talk over, bullets to fly

You've heard and seen all the propaganda flying around his year's UK football program. It's amazed you at times, led you into anticipation, possibly even anxiety. It was all produced, however, by reporters and advertisers and PK people. Some necessarily biased, others attempting to be objective.

But you want to see them with

But you want to see them with your own eyes. When the Cats step out onto the field Saturday to play Central Michigan University, those slogans and sound-bytes will all be dead just as the real action comes to life, as Bill Curry coaches his first game at UK. "It's time for the talk to be over," Curry said at yesterday's lunchen. "As they say, we're shooting real bullets now." Real bullets. And judging from the looks of things, UK will be quicker on the draw. CMU, however, will be carrying the bigger guns. UK, with the loss of several big men from last season, will be fielding a small, quick team Saturday, while CMU has, according to UK's defensive coordinator Larry New, "about as big a team as anybody in college football."

"They have a good throwing offense, they're big and they play hard-nosed old-fashioned football."
New said. "Sul I expect our young to get at 'em. ... I expect to win and our players expect to win."

As do most of the fans and media in the state. And for good reason. The Chippewas are a dominating force — but only in the weak Mid-Atlantic Conference. Last year they flinshed 5-2-1 in their conference while going 5-5-1 overall. They didn't win anywhere outside their conference, nonetheless in the strong SC.

The history of UK-CMU games began in 1983. BUK won again, in a fan-soaked, fumble-filled 18-7.

Besides a lack of a strong competitive base, the unknown also weights heavily on CMU's. The prest release from from Mount

McConnell looking for additional votes on campus

U.S. Senator Mitch McConnell speaks at a rally hosted by Young Kentuckians for McConnell at the Student Center yesterday.

U.S. Senator Mitch McConnell urged students at a rally yesterday to recruit additional supporters as his campaign for re-lection enters is "final stretch."

Young Kentuckians for McConnell, one of 26 campus organizations across Kentucky, hosted a rally yesterday in the Student Center to boost support in the last two months of McConnell's campaign. "Senator McConnell really has students' interest at heart," said Scott Damron, chairman of the University's campaign organization.

McConnell said surveys show the majority of ages 18-35 only vote during presidential-election years. That same age group is not likely to vote for Republican candidates in any election, he said.

"I know how important your age group is to this election and I need your help," he said.

"I like that he places such great emphasis on what college students think," said Sarah Coursey, Student Government Association vice-president, who interned at campaign in McConnell stressed to about 50 when the control of the summer.

importance of the "mission" — get-ting as many students to register and vote as possible.

Young Kentuckians across the state distribute "STICK WITH MITCH" yard signs and bumper stickers, hold rallies and encourage peers to register in time to vote for the election, according to Bates Hunter, state chairman for the or-ganization.

Hunter, state chairman for the or-ganization.

McConnell, the first Republican candidate in Kentucky in the last 22 years elected U.S. Senator, boasted that many democrats are showing an interest in his campaign and said he expected Active Democrats for McConnell, a campus organization of supporting Democrats, to popu-late every county in the state soon. McConnell said several state and local government officials who are Democrats are surprisingly saying STICK WITH MITCH.

"That's showing real courage," he said.

McConneli stated, during a 45minute speech, he is the first Republican candidate to receive support from the Kentucky Farm Organization and the Kentucky Hospital Association. "Where are Stoane's group supporters?" he asked.

Two debates between McConnell and Democrat opponent Harvey Sloane are scheduled to air on Lexington television Sept. 5 and 30. McConnell said he "expects Sloane to come out swinging" after Labor Day weekend.

The next day he did it again to about 3,000 people in Central Park.
Hawkins has been riding high lately. After appearing in last year's Jim Jarmusch film "Mystery Train," he came out with a new greatest hits alburn this year. In June, he and his band began another tour and he married a young woman from Japan, where he is a celebrity in Sony commercials.

"Spell," a demented blues waltz written to woo back a girlfriend, is his biggest hit. It was banned by some radio stations when it first came out in the 1950s because it supposedly sounded cannibalistic, Hawkins said in an interview.

Hawkins combines his own de-mented blues and rock 'n' roll songs with off-beat renditions of such campy old tunes as Cole Porter's "I Love Paris."

"I don't sing them. I destroy them," he said in his hotel room be-fore the Central Park show, dressed down in jeans, a camouflage T-shirt and cowboy boots.

During gigs, he nearly destroyed himself. Hawkins has seriously burned himself several times when using exploding fuse boxes on stage.

He used to climb out of a coffin during his acts — something George Clinton of the funk group Parliament later did.

Open search would have allayed fears

UK has been looking for a permanent president for more than eight months. Board of Trustees Chairman Foster Ockerman, who also is heading the presidential search committee, said that finalists for the job will be brought to campus the week of Sept. 10. UK is expected to name its 10th president at the Sept. 18 meeting of the Board of Trustees.

Since he was named interim president Dec. 28, there has been a foregone conclusion among many people on campus that Charles Wethington would be named president.

Many people have pointed to Wethington's friendship with Gov. Wallace Wilkinson and Wethington's political relation-ship with many UK trustees, including Ockerman, as a reason why Wethington has an inside shot at being named president.

The controversy surrounding Wethington, who has done rela tively little to attract attention, has sharply divided the campus, causing faculty, students and staff to take a rather pessimistic view about this place's future. They perceive — with good reason — that the presidential search is tainted with state politics, especially the long hand of Wilkinson.

An easy way UK could have avoided creating such an impression was if the presidential search hadbeen more open from he very beginning.

One of the first actions the presidential search comm took was to hire an outside consultant firm to solicit for prospective presidents. The University shelled out $14,000 plus ex penses for Lamalie Associates, Inc., to conduct interviews. After the preliminary 77 candidates who agreed to be considered for the position were interviewed, the list was narrowed to 15, then 14 before the final four were chosen.

The rationale for keeping candidates' names confidential is that some of the individuals would have dropped out if their current institutions knew they were looking for another place to Establishing a system that narrowed the search confidentially was a good idea, but when the consulting firm had whittled the list to 15, the University community should have known who those people were. If someone really wanted to be president of UK then they should not have minded their name b

Furthermore, the University would have stopped wondering whether Wethington was a candidate for the job, which might have made the atmosphere a little more pleasant around here.

What kind of president would Charles Wethington make?

be able to attract scholars

K's future hangs in the balance. Whether it will continue to move forward as a great state university depends on whether Charles Wethington's attempt to be president will be denied. It should be mentioned that Wethington is not increase in the original way.

tempt to be president will be denied. It should be mentioned that Wethington is not incompetent. He has good management skills and experience, and a fine sense for public relations. As a person, he is attractive, extremely hard-working, demanding and conscientious. He has managed the community college system well, but "the lee Man" (as he is known in the system) kept his faculty grossly underpaid for years at salaries below those of many public school teachers and far below those of benchmark community college faculties.

As for academic freedom, little of it existed in the community colleges, according to reports received by the UK chapter of the American Association of University Professors. However, Wethington, like his predecessors, has added more colleges, enrolled more students and constructed more buildings. Credit must be given to him for these achievements.

But being president of a Ph.D.-ranting university is another mat-granting university is another matter. The current campus witticism is that Wethington would not be hired as an assistant professor at UK. While that may be an exaggeration, it is true that he would not be appointed president at any other comparable institution. Certainly, the benchmark schools would not give his application a second glance. He simply lacks the academic credentials. When the University recently searched for basketball and football coaches, only candidates of national reputation and proven university experience were considered.

Bill Curry and Rick Pitino were outstanding selections. Surely the University should limit its presidential search to candidates of like stature and comparable experience to fill its highest office.

Otherwise, UK will lose its respected national reputation. Faculty and administrations round the country will perceive that Wethington's appointment is a political one. Outstanding professors will not consider coming here.

To use my former department as an example, it is questionable that such an array of nationally renowned English department scholars as J.A. Bryant, who was recruited from Syracuse; John G. Cawelli from Chicago; and John L. Clubbe from Duke would have joined the UK faculty if the president lacked university teaching and research experience and had been appointed under similar political rule.

In addition, bright young professors will not join the University faculty. One cannot imagine Guy Davenport, recipient of the prestiguous MacArthur award, would have accepted an otter from a university with a tainted reputation when he was seeking a position in the 1960s. If Wethington is selected, the University will have great difficulty recruiting top scholars.

Many superior graduate students will also not be attracted here. Their advisers will caution against the seeking graduate degrees from an institution looked down upon in the academic world.

institution looked down upon in the academic world.

The value of a master's degree or doctorate from UK will deteriorate. And the instruction in freshman and sophomore courses will suffer because graduate students teach many. In addition to being unable to attract nationally recognized scholars, bright young professors and superior graduate students, the University will lose some of its present faculty. There has been a slow erosion in recent years. Good professors have left; others are already talking of leaving if Wethington is appointed.

Obviously, Wethington's selection will be political. But he who lives by the sword is destined to die by it. When a new political administration comes into power, Wethington will be dumped and replaced by another political figure.

Thus the University will become a political football, kicked around by one coverne, and then another.

Thus the University will become a political football, kicked around by one governor and then another. The future does not look bright. That is tragic because in the past two decades the University has made great strides as an academic institution. It is among only 45 public universities rated "first class" by the Camegie foundation. In faculty has won numerous honors, among then 21 Fullright Fellowships in recent years. It is on its way to becoming a great state university.

Whether it will continue this progress depends on the wisdom of the trustees. The future of the University rests in their hands.

Some trustees, realizing the gravity and importance of the situation, will vote for the most qualified candidate, one who will bring scholarly respect, inspirational leadership and academic vision to the office.

Let us hope that alumni and friends of the University will convince other trustees to rise to the occasion by recognizing that they have an obligation higher than their personal debt to the governor.

To a great extent, as the flagship university goes, so goes the state in educating its brightest students, in attracting industry, in graduating community leaders, in providing services to citizens, and in creating a national image.

services to citizens, and in creating a national image.
What is best for the University is best for the state.
And what is best for the University is a president who will be respected by faculty members and administrators, admired by trustees, esteemed by alumni, liked by students, approved by citizens and recognized nationally by the academic world.

Understanding how UK works most important

Perhaps my thesis can be glibly summed up with the barnyard analogy that you don't have to be a cow to manage a dairy farm. Neither should you have to be a Nobel Prize winner to manage a university.

university.

In fact, coss may not be good choices for managing dairy farms.
But more seriously, UK is a large and complex organization. Administratively, and also by function, it consists of three parts: the main, or the Lexington Campus, the Medical Center and the Community College System. Each part is headed by a chancellor who is its chief cademic and administrative officer.
Given the tripartite nature of the and administrative officer.

Given the tripartite nature of the University, there seems to be no reason why its president should not be representative of any one of its three parts. The individual chancellors should be the role models and representatives of their faculties.

Wethington has been a fine role model and representative of the community college faculty.

I have been very much impressed.

community college faculty.

I have been very much impressed by his success in keeping the 14 widely scattered colleges both oriented toward their communities and at the same time academically respectable in regions where other academic institutions have not flourished.

ished. He also has kept them free of the scandals that seem to regularly afficir many state public agencies. It speaks well of his leadership and "political" abilities in the highest sense of the word. There are honest and good politicians. We frequently call them "statesmen," and I believe Wethington deserves that appellation.

Many of my colleagues argue that Wethington lacks "academic credentials" or that he is not a "scholar."

In my experience, faculty committees tend to equate scholarship and academic qualifications with the production of mountains of journal articles and university press books. I respectably disagree, despite having contributed my share to the piles in my field. A scholar must be farmore than a fount of narrow, unread and unreadable research publications. A scholar must be a broad, humane, sensitive intellectual.

A good scholar must be a good teacher, both one on one, and in front of a large audience. A good scholar must be supportive of scholarship in others, and must work to facilitate that unselfishly. Honor, integrity, good judgment and leadership are basic attributes of a good scholar.

A prolific production of printed

A prolific production of printed paper may, or may not, be a good scholar. One who has not produced scholar. One who has not produced much in print may, nevertheless, be a great scholar.

The presidential search committee, after exhaustive investigation of the credentials of the various candidates, should be in a position to make the judgment whether Wethington qualifies as a great scholar despite lack of printed effluent. I rather believe he fits the broad interpretation.

An argument many of my colleagues have made is that Wethington's appointment would be a 'poliical' one, and that he, and through him the University, would suffer with a change of administration in Frankfort.

But Wethington has successfully built up the Community College System over a span of several administrations, and in cooperation

System over a span of several administrations, and in cooperation with a huge number and variety of local political leaders.

There is no reason to believe his skills in interpersonal relations would suddenly desert him if he became president. Nor would his many valuable contacts throughout the state, many with political opponents of the present governor.

Wethington's proven success in dealing with the University's broad Kentucky constituency should deugh heavily in the search committee's deliberations.

The majority of UK students are not in Lexington, nor are most of UK employers, the taxpayers of the commonwealth. Our research, service and educational missions are wide in scope.
