Schools to combat alcohol abuse on campus

A $249,069 grant may help curb drinking among students

By Tasha Harris

"When you walk by a dorm room and you see beer bottles lined up on the windows, that tells you there's a problem," said Randy Gray, an art studio sophomore vent alcohol abuse among college students.

Under-age drinking, driving under the influence of alcohol and any other alcohol-related acts that could be harmful are considered high-risk drinking. Experts and students agree college campuses have their share of such behavior.

The grant was awarded through the Kentucky Network of Colleges and Universities, a coalition committed to the elimination of drug and alcohol abuse. The network aims reduce risky drinking among college students through market Like the college students through market with the college students. The group will consist of seculty, staff, students and community members who will device strategies to cope with alcohol abuse based on their research and survey results.

Apathy on campus: Students lack support for the presidential campaign

By Britt Clem

It's no surprise college students don't seem interested in the 2000 presidential election.

"Presidential races have become too much the same." Jessica Johnson, a computer science junior; said. Jany students feel there isn't a strong distinction between candidates parties or their issues any more;

parties or their issues anymore.

There is each the media is to blame for the lack of notivated voters.

"I think the media is making or breaking the candidates," said Shaun Saunders, a finance senior. "This early in the race, most Americans are not interested right now. But the media is force-feeding them to pay attention to non-important issues."

Tim Cantrell, a politi-science professor at sidential campaign

LCC, has his own opinions
as to why students are uninterested.

"Students, especially 18 to 20-year-olds, since they got the right to vote in Georgia in 1942, are the lowest (age group) to vote, because they don't see a direct outcome in their life," Cantrell said.
Students agree.

"We feel like what goes on doesn't pertain to us. The government is run by old money, and people like us don't have anything to do with it. Oid people own and run everything, so we can't change what needs to be changed," Justin Head, a biology seenior, said.

Cantrell said another reason for the lack of political interest is the great deal of Americans who think the candidates have already been chosen and don't feel there is much that can be done.

Democratic presidential hopeful Bill Bradley looks at Vice President Al Gore as he speaks during a town meeting at Dartmouth College in Hanover, N. H., Wednesday, Oct. 27, 1999.

This lack of interest leads to a lack of mobility in college voters.

"We don't have a big voter turnout, so politicians don't really care what (college students) think." said Emily Romero, an inter-strategic communications sophomore. "If we were involved in more issues, I think the turnout would be better."

Students have other things on their minds, and voting is low on their priority lists. It seems that until students can see how an election card directly effect in their lives, their involvement will continue to be winimal.

UK Art Museum may relocate downtown

A mutual agreement: Art and history museums will be together, pending approval

By Hillary Cromer

MANGAGE (2019)

The UK Art Museum might pack up and move out — to the old Fayette County Courthouse.
Members of the Urban County Council and the museum may collaborate to enhance and expand UK's museum.

The plan would be to house both the UK Art Museum, currently residing at the Singletary Center for the Arts, and a local history museum in the old Fayette County Court House.

"Downtown isn't very faraway," said Harriet Fowler, director of the art museum. "I'm hoping the beautiful building will attract even more people."

According to the proposal, the art museum would get the majority of the space for permanent exhibits, and the two would share temporary exhiblis.

The museum would be open to the public with no admission charge. Although the art museum would attract more of the general public, Fowler does not want to allenate UK's student and staff population.

"I don't want students to feel that it's no longer for them." Fowler said, "We aren't meaning to turn backs by moving."

Fowler said that we might see more of these collaborations in the future.

"It is a new museum for a new century," she said.

The committee will hold another meeting scheduled on Feb. 2 for public input on the proposal, which is to raise 83. Similion for the project Courbouse renovations would cost a projected 87 million. ## Movie tries to stay true

Artistic freedom: Like most movies, film takes a few liberties with the storyline takes a few liberties with the storyline

By Patrick Avery

SMY WENTER

Many movies take significant dramatic liberties when bringing novels to the big screen. The Hurricane is no exception.

The movie borrows most of its information from two different books. Rubin "Hurricane" Carter's autobiography carter's intraceration in the Trenton SMR and the Hurricane. The Contender to Misser Prison. The second book, written by Sam Chaiton and Tearter's winton and called "Lazarus and the Hurricane" The United Story of the Freeing of Rubin Hurricane. Carter, depict of the movie in the passing of the content of the Carter.

These books complement ach other intelly and provide the basis for an excellent motion picture screenplay. However, many important facts get lost in the making of the movie.

Carter was imprisoned in Carter's separate ways.

He was unquestionably one of the best players to set foot in Rupp Arena.

Like most basketball players with his talent, he left the college ranks early to join the rich and famous lifestyle of the National Basketball Association.

A consequence of this action is not having time to finish the requirements for a college degree. Another consequence of leaving early, at least at some universities including UK, is that an athlete cannot have their jersey retried unless they have a degree.

This is a logical and symbolic rule. All collegiate athletes are student-athletes. They receive a scholarship to the university to earn a degree as well as continue their athletic endeavors at a higher level.

If we reward and recognize student athletes for only their accomplishments on the playing surface, then we send the message to future student athletes that the university is more concerned with athletics than education. Furthermore, it devalues the accomplishment of having such accolades bestowed on the athlete that earned a degree.

All of this is not to say that Jamal is unworthy of such an acknowledgement. He certainly has contributed to UK in other ways as well, such as establishing a scholarship fund for poor and minority students.

He is a first-class individual who has earned his way to stardom. We just feel he should be judged by the same academic standards as other student athletes before hanging his jersey in Rupp's rafters.

Speak up against Ky's House Bill 70

Have you heard of House Bill 70?
If you value your civil rights, pay attention: you're about to be stripped of a few of them.
This bill is bouncing around the Kentucky legislature right now. If we don't do something about it, by the end of next month, it could become law.

It has since been amended so that the organizations can only discriminate based on religion in all "public accommodation, resort or amusement."

It has since been amended so that the organizations can only discriminate based on religion in all "public accommodation" is a fairly broad term, so it's difficult to say exactly what it could pertain to.

It could mean a religious school, an after-school davacer program sponsored by a church, a religious club at a public school, a Christian bookstore, the YMCA or possibly even a religiously affiliated hospital.

If so, then any one of these organizations could turn away any person because they were Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, atheist, etc. Does that sound American?

So why should you care about HB 70 Mat's the big deal, anyway? If private organizations can already do this, why not etc. The programment of the programment of the programment, which should be taking steps forward to oppose and lessen discrimination in our communities, will be supporting it instead.

They will be encouraging us to segregate ourselves based on our religious differences, which can be just as dangerous and prejudied as racism.

This is far from a step forward. Rather, it is a huge leap backwards for a society that has been struggling for so long to learn to accept each other.

Rather, it is a huge leap backwards for a society that has been struggling for so long to learn to accept each other.

What makes Kentucky's state government think it can get away with this?

There are a lot of non-Christians here. There are a lot of people who believe that this is wrong, that no person has the right to discriminate against another for any reason, and have to right to encourage it.

Aren't they going to be a little upset about this? Well, maybe, but only if they know about it and take it seriously.

That's exactly what this body of lawmakers, which consists largely of white, conservative, heterosevaul males who were raised in the Bible belt, is counting on.

They don't want you to know or do anything about it. If they keep it quiet, they can get away with it. Know why He 70 was taken off the Calling their representatives and complaining.

Our voices were heard! We can make a difference. We can stop this, and HB 70 is proof.

Nose for news? One lucky graduate student will be eligible to earn while they learn

Higher education just of-fered more opportunity.

The UK Graduate School, in cooperation with The Lex-ington Herald-Leader, is now offering a graduate student with an interest in journalism a chance for some hands-on experience.

The new fellowship, endowed by the Herald-Leader, includes a summer internship at the newspaper, a $10,000 stipend and a full tuition scholarship.

This is the first year for the fellowship, and both the school and the newspaper are hoping for good results. "We can't really predict "We can't really predict who can't really students we will heave any students we will heave any students with the wear and the students in the two cellent pool of applicants," said Lisa Collins, assistant dean of graduate studies.

The fellowship main goal is to keep students interested in the local community and keep hem working in the state after they graduate from UK.

"This fellowship represents a partnership between the school and a local business," Collins said. "It shows that both the school and and the community are interested in keeping excellent students in the area after they graduate."

The graduate school hopes to use the fellowship to attract students from minority and caust don't have to have undergraduate degrees in journalism either. Students applying for master's or doctoral programs in accounting, business administration, communication, computer science and other areas are eligible for the fellowship. Collins is expecting the best from the pool of graduate students who might apply.
