vated, as previously planned.

The money has been "frozen," acording to Lynne Hunt, Student Activities Board president, because of the growing concern over Gov.
Wallace Wilkinson's proposed budget for the next biennium.

The money will be frozen, Hunt said, pending a reallocation of UK's

Frank Harris, director of the Stu-dent Center, told the SAB last night that the renovation projects were "dead in the water."

"It earn't tell you whether we're young to get the work done," he said. "It have been garden for meeting the statistical proposals last September for renovating the Great Lall and the mezzanine of the Student Center.

The renovation was to include painting the stairwell leading to the Grand Ballroom; new floor tile, rugs and furniture for the Great Hall; and anew lighting system.

At that turne, Hunt said the "Student Center issue" data hot died, and was "part one of the plan."

Last night, however, Hunt said she now fell like she had "frostblie" from the spending freeze.

"It's extremely trustrating," she said. "If don't understand why it's said. "If don't understand why it's guess it was a wise decision," the said. "Where would we get the SecNAR, Page 2 (SMAR, Page 2) (SMAR

Abolishment of VP politically motivated SGA amendment

It's odd how legislation relating to the Student Government Association elections has a peculiar habit of surfacing right before the campaigns.

Last year, an amendment was proposed that called for candidates to run on tickets instead of individually. The senate, seeing through the political motivations behind the legislation, responsibly rejected it.

Tonight, the senate is faced with a similar issue.
Once again, the senate will decide on an amendment that calls for the abolishment of the executive vice president and the establishment of a chief of staff to be appointed by the president.

At the senate's last meeting, the amendment was passed by a 25-9 margin. It will require another two-thirds majority vote in order to be implemented.

When the amendment came up for a vote the last time, we strongly urged the senators to vote against it. We urge them to do the same once again.

As we have said in this space before, the idea behind the amendment is a worthy one — ensure that the president will have someone within the executive branch who will oversee the day-to-day operations of the executive branch.

This year the executive branch probably has not run as will oversee the uay-roun.

This year the executive branch probably has not run as smoothly as it should have because of the bickering between President Cyndi Weaver and Executive Vice President Brad Dixon.

But simply because you have one year in which two officials do not work well together, that does not call for the elimination of one of the positions to remedy the problem.

As an alternative to this amendment, we have proposed the idea of requiring executive candidates to run on tickets, instead of individually, and only allowing students to vote for straight tickets. We still feel that is the best solution to avoiding future in-house fighting.

Although some candidates would surley choose their running mates for purely political reasons, they would have themselves to blame if they could not work with each other.

The two sponsors of the amendment are Allied Health other.

The two sponsors of the amendment are Allied Health Senator David Bingham and Dixon.

When Dixon spoke at the last meeting on the amendment, he refuted the charge that he sponsored the legislation because of political motivations. Since Dixon plants to graduate this year it would be difficult to understand what he would have to gain from eliminating the position. Afterall, he did promise in his campaign rhetoric last spring to abolish the position.

Although Dixon might not have much to gain from the

Although Dixon might not have much to gain from the amendment, there are some senators who have some political bets wagered on its outcome.

In case you don't know, SGA elections are less than two months away, and jockeying for senate support has been going on since the end of last semester.

Two names that continue to surface as likely presidential candidates are Senior Vice President Susan Bridges and Senator at Large David Botkins.

Bridges is rumored to already have her running mates selected and Botkins has only chosen a candidate to fill the slot of senior vice president.

No wonder Bridges opposed Botkins' move at the last meeting to suspend the rules in order to vote on the amendment a second time.

And once Botkins was told the constitution would not allow the rules to be suspended, Bridges quickly snapped, "See ya in two weeks."

Therefore, with such a political cloud surrounding the antile search.

Therefore, with such a political cloud surrounding the entire issue, senators should put the students' best interest first and reject the amendment.

first and reject the amendment.

If it is such a good idea, they can vote on it again early next semester, when not so many people have their eyes on

SGA should keep on top of records

Following the 1986 Student Government Association freshman senate elections, it was revealed that four freshmen had voted twice, including one of the candidates who was elected senator.

was elected senator.

However, since eight pages of the voting records were missing, no one knew how many other freshmen also decided to vote twice.

Once again, it seems that SGA is missing some records.

Last week, Ann Darlington filed an appeal with the Judicial Board because she claims to have been unfairly kept out of the agrade.

Darlington, who finished 17th among senator at large candidates, says she should have replaced Senator at Large David Moore when he graduated last semester.

But according to a ruling by the Elections Board last spring, Darlington never turned in her campiagn expenditure forms, thus disqualifying her from serving in this year's senate.

Darlington contends that she turned them in. However, ere seems to be no way of verifying either story.

According to last year's Elections Board Chairman Ken Walker, last spring's election records are missing, and therefore, there is no hard evidence to prove either case. That is simply irresponsible on the part of SGA. In order for any organization, especially one that models itself after a government, to function efficiently, accurate and detailed records must be kept.

If SGA hopes to be taken seriously, then it must learn to preserve its records. Otherwise, it should not expect to receive any more respect from the student body than it gives toward keeping records.

Lexington wine experts offer advice

By KAREN PHILLIPS Design Editor

An intimate Valentine's Day dinner for two is a special occasion. The right date, the right atmosphere, the right food and the right wine.

Many people don't know how to choose a wine and don't even try. But come on, does your date want to drink a soda-pop with dinner?

Selecting a nice wine doesn't have to be difficult or expensive. It can be very easy, inexpensive and intriguing just by following a few simple guidelines. First of all, your wine must compliment your dinner, unless you want to ruin the taste of your home-cooked meal or professionally prepared restaurant dinner.

The food/wine compliment isn't that strict. Just remember, a red with red meats, white with fish and chicken. A rose wine will compliment any meal, as will champagine. And veal, pork and ham will go well with any wine or champagne selection.

with any wine or champagne selection.

Perhaps the most difficult part of selecting a wine is the large number available — all the bottles claim to be well-produced, have a pleasing taste and be worth the price.

Don't let the overwhelming number of wines scare you off, though, at least not this holiday. Some Lexington wine experts have offered some sound advice for tasty Valentine's Day wines and champagnes.

A rose wine is currently one of the most widely bought and most popular wines. Made from white grape juice which is exposed to a red grape skin for just a short period of time, the wine is a bright pink color with a light and fruity taste.

"The hottest wines going right

"The hottest wines going right
now are blush (rose) wines;" said Roger Leasor, operations manager of Liquor Barn on Richmond Road.
He suggested the brands Sutter tive taste. "It's a very romantic looking wine," Leasor_said. "It's very popular and basically inexpensive."

very popular and basically inexpensive."

Chris Franklin, a manager with Franklin Four, Inc., a company which owns several Lexington liquor stores, also suggests a rose wine for a Valentine's Day dinner.

"A lot of people right now like a white zinfandel wine," he said. "It's not dry or sweet and moderately priced between $4 and $6 a bottle." Franklin suggested the brand Beringer white zinfandel as being one of the best out of that group.

Bill Nave, owner of Bill Nave's Wine and Spirits on Nicholasville Road, suggests a rose wine if the drinker is not much into drinking wines.

urinker is not much into drinking wines.
"They would probably like the more popular kind," he said, "the white zinfandels." He also suggested a Riunite or Cella, which carries a more fruity quality such as rasberry, peach and apple and are cheaply priced at $3 to $4 a bottle.

If a drier, more tart taste is your forte, and your meal is without red meat, then a white wine would be the best selection. Many of today's best white wines are made in California. White wines are made from white grape juice and white grape skins.

For a white wine, Leasor recommended Clos Robert chardonnay for $5 to $6 a bottle as an "outstanding value." For a little more money he recommended Edna Valley chardonnay. "An extraordinary bottle of wine for $11 to $12," he said.

Franklin said there are hundreds of chardonnays, many with, and for people with, different tastes. "If I didn't know what I wanted, though," he said, "I'd stay with a sweeter one."

didn't know what I wanted, though, "he said, "I'd stay with a sweeter one."

He suggested the brand Pouilly-Fuisse, which runs for $17 to $18, or Zhardonnay Chardonnay, a little cheaper at $8 a bottle.

If the light, fruity tastes of the white and rose isn't the right choice for the evening, go with the hearty flavor of a red wine. Also made from grape juice, this wine spends its entire process in the company of red grape skins to achieve its deep, burgundy color.

A bordeaux or burgundy from France was suggested by Nave. "They're a little more expensive," he said, but worth the price. A bordeaux is very dry, and a burgundy a little more fruity. They run from $6 a bottle and up. Another red wine, a beaujolais, is less dry, and fruity. Leasor recommends a Cabernet Sauvignon from Congress Spring Winery which runs arond $12 or $13. Another brand, Carmenet, "is beauitfully packaged for about $10 to $15 a bottle. For even less money, Leasor suggested, try Hawk Crest, from the Stag's Leap winery, for $5 to $6.

Champagne isn't commonly suggested to go with a meal, but it's perfectly fine selection, say wine experts. Champagne is made the same as wine except it's allowed to go through a second fermentation period to produce the carbon dioxide bubbles.

"Champagne is perhaps best for bubbles.

"Champagne is perhaps best for perts say a white zinfandel goes with just about anything.

Valentine's Day," said Leasor. "With or for dessert, or all through the meal. It's one of the more romantic products in the world."

He recommended champagne from the House of Moet Chandon and Dom Perignon as top of the line and most expensive. Chandon, from California, is also a fine champagne

Champagne is normally dry, but you can buy a sweet sparkling champagne wine from Italy called Austi Spumanti, which runs for $5 to $6 a bottle. Brute is the driest champagne, Nave said. However, a champagne labeled extra dry is less dry. If you like a sweet champagne, try a semi seco, he said, from France or Spain.

We hope this has helped erase some of the confusion over wines, or just given some good brands to try. However, if you're still confused, all wine and liquor sellers said to just ask someone for help, that's what the salespeople are there for.

And one more thing, Valentine's Day is on a Sunday this year. So if you're eating at home, remember the liquor laws and buy it before

Love's archer makes a few confessions

It wasn't always easy — shooting my arrows of love. In fact, at one point in my career, it was just plain destructive.

These little steel shafts of love contain some pretty potent emotions. If fired or used improperly, they can cause immeasurable damage.

Like the day I got my first assignment. They just threw the bow in this time.

they can cause immeasurable damage.

Like the day I got my first assignment. They just threw the bow in my arms and said "you're it Norbert." (My name was Norbert before I changed it. "Cupid" just sounded more romantic; besides, this way no one could confuse me with anybody else.)

Anyway, they threw this bow in my arms and I just had to do the job. If I didn't I'd have to go back to being a petroleum transfer engineer, being a petroleum transfer engineer, (it's a fancy word for a gas station dant)

So I was off on my route with this bow and an unextinguishable supply

As far as I can remember it was a clear day in June. I was flying over a field in Nebraska and I found what I was looking for — a young girl picking dandelions in a field.

I squared around and positioned myself on this hill overlooking the field and stabbed myself in the posterior section with one of my arrows.

Unfortunately there was a bit of rust on the tip and I hadn't had a tetanus shot in over six years. Yep, you guessed it, lockjaw.

Well, being a fairy, the effects were only temporary. I mumbled around for awhile in the diaper I'd been issued, (diapers are official love-striking garments — you've never heard of anyone not loving a baby), and waited for my lockjaw to subside.

I pulled out a bottle of Cognac from under my bow and threw back a snootful. I needed to score me a "lovestranch baby," as Stevie Ray

What had I done? I had forgotten What had I done? I had forgotten the quintessencial rule of rendering an individual lovestruck. I had forgotten to match the pair, to plan on who would fall in love with.

There I was, clad in a diaper with a three-day growth of beard on my face and a cigarette suspended between my teeth, and she delivers the oldest line ever written — "Hi sweety, come here often?" Love, huh! I wanted no part of it. As far as I was concerned there was only one solution — to hit the road faster than a wound-up diesel.

So, as she slept (clinging to the shaft of the arrow that struck her), I slipped away, leaving only a note explaining that she cannot possibly love me. Since that point in time I have never been seen again.

I've remained hidden, invisible to mortal eyes.

Oh, they've searched. Fools with thoughts of immeasurable riches in their heads have hunted my existence. But I have remained in hiding, in hiding from that lovestruck girl.

Broken Hearts:

How to cope

By JAYE BEELER Staff Writer

Is it possible to have a broken heart? Of course — and getting over the trauma of a broken heart is never pleasant.

"People experience the feeling of being broken apart when a relationship ends," said Dr. Gregory Brock, chairman of the Family Studies Department. "It stems from the sense of loss one feels when someone or something is taken away."

Carla Wolff, a licensed clinical social worker at Associates for

Carla Wolff, a licensed clinical social worker at Associates for Counseling and Therapy, said this sense of loss is best realized and then forgotten. "To get over a broken heart I recommend a person ODs (on feelings)."
Wolff said the person who was dumped should progress through a mourning stage. The end of a relationship is the death of a relationship. A relationship and the relationship are the read of the relationship and the relationship and different needs are not being met. "During this period, which should last 48 hours, the dumpee should reminisce about happy moments in the relationship, cry some and generally feel bad," Wolff said. "After the mourning stage the dumpee should rip everything up or put all memeneverything up or put all memen-tos away."

Brock likewise believes that everyone progresses through a mourning stage in dealing with the loss of someone special, but he divides it into four stages— denial, anger, depression and ac-ceptance.

Some of the stages may occur simultaneously and the four stages may occur in any order, Brock said.

Bonnie Williams, a pyschology

Brock said.

Bonnie Williams, a pyschology sophomore, experienced two of the stages, anger and depression, after a recent breakup.

"We broke up Super Bowl Sunday and I hate him," Williams said. "I'm so mad, hurt and miserable, I want to kill him."

"I'm going to blow up his house and I'm never going to speak to him until he calls me."

Once a person goes through

Once a person goes through these stages, he or she can go on with life, Brock said.

"Once a person picks up the pieces, he or she will experience flashes of lost. The feelings of intensity will not demolish totally with time but they will be less frequent," Brock said.

People should be patient and recognize the natural progression to getting over a broken heart. There are dos and don'ts for people getting over the trauma of a broken heart to help the healing process, Brock said.

"Don't wallow around in it (depression), like listening repeatedly to sad songs," Brock said.

Don't make big decisions or enter a new relationship. A person should not make big decisions that would drastically change one's life or enter another relationship on the rebound, Brock advised.

Do keep the same schedule and dom ix with people, Brock said.

Do stay physically active, for example, with a workout at the gym or pool. A person feels more in control if he or she is in control of his or her body, Brock said.

Terry Cambron, a pre-med freshman, finds solace in physi-cal activity and eating. "When things don't go well in a relationship, I jog or do some-thing athletic and eat," Cambron said. said

"It feels terrible to have your "It feets terrine to have your heart broken; I mean it's not a everyday occurrence," Cambron said. "I have had my heart bro-ken by different girls because I expect too much and then some-thing goes wrong." Do let your friends know you are hurting. Let them take care of you. That will make you feel lovable and they will also get you involved socially.

Do pay attention to someone else. For example, help a handicapped child — it will put your problem in perspective and lessen the magnitude of it, Brock

"The dumpee should not call the dumper because that drags it out," Wolff said. "Don't accidentally bump into the dumper or walk by the dumper's house. Don't try to change to make the dumper want you back, like dye your hair blonde."

"Those games make the healing process take longer."
Of course, the best way to get over a broken heart is to never get one. But since that's often impossible, follow the guidelines listed above.

Valentine's Day hasn't always been flowers and candy

By JULIE ESSELMAN Staff Writer

Imagine a dry dirt road in ancient Rome where young women are lined up, anxiously looking around in anticipation. Suddenly, a swarm of young men in chariots race around a curve, waving whips in the air. The whips strike several of the maidens, but instead of crying out in pain, they laugh for joy because they have now become fertile.

No, this isn't a scene from another they laugh for joy because they nave now become fertile.

No, this isn't a scene from another sadistic Hollywood movie; it's the first celebration of the feast that we now call St. Valentine's Day.

The concept of St. Valentine's Day goes back to the time before Christ when Romans celebrated the sexual festival called Lupercalia in the middle of February. In addition to fertility rites, Romans would sacrifice animals to the god Faunus.

Centuries later, however, the day was celebrated in honor of Juno, goddess of women and childbirth, and the customs were modified to a kind of love lottery.

and the customs were modified to a kind of love lottery. "Young maidens would put their names on notes in a public urn, and eligible males took turns drawing names," said psychology professor Robert Baker, who collects informa-tion on legends. After the men had drawn their names, they would send notes and court their chosen "partnotes and court their chosen "partners."

The actual legend of St. Valentine has several origins, Baker said.

One story says that Valentine was a priest who was executed by the Roman Emperor Claudius II for performing marriage ceremonies for Roman soldiers. There was also a Valentine who was martyred for his Christian beliefs. Supposedly the execution of either or both of these men occurred on Feb. 14.

The Roman Catholic Church canonized a St. Valentine who became the patron of lovers, and the festivals were dedicated to him.

"Pagan feasts were replaced by Christian feasts to make them more acceptable," Baker said.

Legend says that Valentine was beheaded at the precise moment his lover received a love note from him. And, as psychologist Paul Chance said in Psychology Today, "Who better to be the patron saint of lovers than a man intimately acquainted with pain?"

During the Middle Ages, St. Valen-

rs than a man intimately acquainted with pain?"

During the Middle Ages, St. Valentine was often invoked in love charms and potions or any custom relating to matters of the heart, as he became the Christianized version of love gods such as Eros and Cupid.

The English celebrated a custom

The English celebrated a custom in which women would venture outside their homes on Valentine's Day, and if the first person they met was a man, that meant they would marry within three months. But if they first saw a woman, they would have to wait another year.

By the 19th century, the celebration of Valentine's Day had become very popular, and books were published containing rhymes that could be used to send to loved ones on that day.

The term "Valentine" gradually became used in reference to these love letters. In 1825, London's post office handled 200,000 more letters on Valentine's Day than at any other time of the year.

Ambitious entrepreneurs saw a way to take advantage of this popular day and began selling special Valentine cards. At first they were simple verses, but they gradually became more elaborate, using lace and symbols like birds, Cupids and, of course, hearts.

"The heart represents the essence of course, hearts or course, nearts.

"The heart represents the essence of human being," said Baker. "It's used to represent love."
But despite Valentine's Day's elaborate and sometimes strange past; Baker said it has always "celebrated human love."

Former Homecoming Queen and UK Dance Cat, Stephanie Strohmeir, said that her favorite line has been delivered to her on the dance floor. "It's happened a couple of times. You're at a party dancing with a guy and all of a sudden he'll say, 'gosh! all my friends seem to have left and I don't have a ride home."

The line "Do you want to come over to my house and look at my compression reverb" is the line that's music to her ears, she said.

However, Urch asked that no explanation of her line be given, saying that it would ruin the effect.

So if UK students are at a loss for words this Valentine's Day, they might be wise to take a few pointers from some UK celebrities.

Or then again, maybe not.

In this world of drive-thru win-dows, self-serve gas stations and microwave meals, it seems like peo-ple are in a rush to do just about ev-erything. Marriage is no exception. If you are one of those couples who is looking for the McDonald's of matrimony, Don's Wedding Chapel is for you. is for you matrimony, Don's Wedding Chapel is for you.

Located on Plaza Drive, Don's of-fers 24-hour service with options for housecalls, reception arrangements, photographers, videographers and an organist. With all of the extras, Don's chapel breeds plenty of instantiches and good stories about couples in a rush.

"People call me at all hours of the day to get married," said Don Anderson, owner and operator of Don's Wedding Chapel. "I've had them call me in the middle of the night to come over here and marry them. Some people just decide that when it's time to do it, it's time."

But Don's isn't the only business in the area that caters to the quick-fix couple. Across the street at Lena's Wedding Center, couples can come in on the day of the event to rent tuxeds, wedding gowns, bridesmaids gowns, boutonnieres and bouquets.

matus gowns, boutoninetes and bouquets.

Lena Cornett, owner and operator of Lena's Wedding Center, recalled one instance when she and Don pooled their resources in order to help a couple join in marital bliss.

"They rented everything from the bride's gown to the bouquets for the bride's gown to the bouquets for the bridesmaids," said Lena. "They dressed over here. Then, I opened the back door and they all walked across the parking lot into Don's door and got married. I had to carry the bride's train across the parking lot."

of course, the stigma associated with this type of wash and wear wedding is that the groom has a shotgun to his back because the bride has a bun in the oven. However, Donsays this is rarely the case.

"Last year I married 464 couples," Don said. "I'd say I saw maybe 20 have-to-cases."

Not all couples want to marry quickly to avoid social taboos. Some people just feel the heat to get hitched and act on impulse. As Don explained, an anxious wedding party can lead to some deceptively creative ceremonies. For example, there was the time a couple came in with 40 witnesses and no marriage license.

"I told them they couldn't get married without a license," Don said. "I told them I'd perform the ceremony that day so their guests wouldn't be disappointed but the marriage wouldn't be official until they came back on Monday with a license and I did the wedding again." So, the couple was married and the crowd was oblivious.

But, speed isn't the only virtue that endears people to Don. Having married people at Pizza Huts, real estate offices, on horseback, on the river in a houseboat, in the infield at the Kentucky Derby and in hot air balloons, some think his most attractive asset is versatility. In fact, Don's shingle used to read: Don Anderson, the Marryin' Magistrate; any time, any place.

Among all of the wacky weddings Don has performed, the one that stands out most in his mind is the ceremony he performed for a couple while they were running in a marathon. The bride, the groom and Don, all dressed in jogging attire, were running in the Bluegrass 10-K in downtown Lexington.

"The ceremony started at Main and Midland," said Don."I pronounced them husband and wife at Main and Lime."

But Don ended up having a dual-couple, but he also decided to finish the race.

"It was rough on me. I was just coming off a broken ankle," said Don. "I gave out at Lime and Church."

While some people prefer an active wedding procession filled with sweat and sneakers, others prefer a supermarket marriage among aisles of soup cans and coffee crystals. One such couple convinced Don to say the wedded words in Winn Dixie. "They called me from the court house and they'd just gatten their li-

"They called me from the court house and they'd just gotten their license," said Don. "They wanted me to meet them halfway between the courthouse and my place, so we met at Winn Dixie."

Then there are those of the equestrian variety who wouldn't go anywhere without their horse. Don recalled one marriage when the entire wedding party including himself rode into the marriage area on horseback. The couple added a special touch to their ceremony by using a barn for a chapel.

While weddings have a harmonious affect on most people, for some, marriage simply fosters amnesia. Don remembered a phone call he received from a lawyer who wanted to know if a certain man had been married at his chapel. After looking through his records, Don found that the man in question had indeed come to his place to tie the knot. Apparently, the groom couldn't remember getting married. But Don says liquor couldn't have been the memory erasing element.

"I won't marry people if they're intoxicated," said Don. "I'll even marry people in bars as long as I can't smell liquor on their breath."

Of course, there are those people who get so carried away with the excitement of weddings that they go in for multiple marriages.

"I've married people who have committed bigamy," said Don. "They call me up later and try to get me to tear up the license, but I wouldn't do! iff they paid me."

While many people utilize Don's services, there are others who watch in awe from the sidelines. The ceremony Don performed in the infield of the Kentucky Derby last year gained coverage from all three of Lexington's television stations.

One Lexington radio station, (MKQQ-FM), decided their listeners would appreciate some romantic renditions from Don's Wedding Chapel last Valentine's Day. As a result, they set up their equipment at the chapel and Don married a couple on the air.

So, whether you are merely an observer or one who is eager to participate in a matrimonial merger, Don's Wedding Chapel has a place in your Valentine's Day this year. The observer needs only to turn his or her dialt of $81. to hear couples taking their vows.

But for those brave souls who want to make their Valentine's Day something extra-special, Don's will be open all day and offering student rates.

Red is more than just a color

By WILL RENSHAW Staff Writer

Staff Writer

Ah, Valentine's Day — a time of year when thoughts of romance, love and passion fill the air and the color red fills the eye.

Everything concerned with Valentine's Day is red — red hearts, red lace, the red bows and arrows of Cupid and even red roses. Red is a good color for this time of year, I guess, but where did this use of red for this heart-felt holiday come from, and does it really have any significance?

In asking a few people around campus, some said it was because red was a passionate color while others seemed to think it was because red was such a happy or holiday color, but the general consensus seems to be that Valentine's Day is red because red is the color associated with the heart.

Happy

There isn't a definite and histori-cally verifiable reason for the use of red on Valentine's Day. But there are definite historical beliefs and psychological effects mysteriously surrounding this highly adorned color that might tie it into the emo-tions aroused on Cupid's favorite day.

Psychologically speaking, red has been found to have some rather interesting effects on the subconscious mind.

In ancient times, the Greeks symbolized love by wearing red sashes, and, according to Faber Birren's The Story of Color, the Egyptians believed that wearing a red amulet could cure impotence.

The Hebrew culture associated Catholicism associated red with charity.

The Chinese even painted the walls of their temples red to symbolize happiness and warmth.

Astrologists go so far as to say that red is associated with pure physical involvement, and, yes, you guessed it, strong passion, which coincides with the symbolic meanings red has taken on throughout literature, such as in Hawthorne's The Scarlet Letter.

In S. Pancoast's Blue and Red Light, Pancoast states that "Red is the motion of life and the Zenith of manhood's prime." In his studies of alchemy in the late 1800s, Pancoast found that red light could be used to accelerate the nervous system to great speeds. great speeds.

Color's folklore based in fact

The American culture seems to equate the color red, along with Valentine's day or Christmas, with wild or joyous occasions, which have found their way into our language in the forms of nifty little cliches such as "Paint the Town Red," "seeing red"and "Red letter day."

So much for surface qualities, let's delve right into the heart of the mat-mind.

"It's probably said that a deep red creates the greatest reaction or effect of heart rate and blood pressure," said Edward Engel, associate professor of psychology at UK. "You certainly get a greater physiological effect from it then any of the other colors."

stitutes a rise in aggression and vigor. "Red is not a color that people choose to decorate the walls in their houses with because of its powerful effects on moods and emotions," Engel said.

Furthermore, Engel pointed out that psychologist Rashan considered red to be linked with neuroticism. During Rashan's Ink Blot tests, when a person was shown an ink blot with a red spot in the center of it after seeing a purely black ink blot, the subject would normally go into "Color Shock," which is an increase in agitation of both mental and physical faculities. Engle said if this "Color Shock" occurred the person was considered neurotic.

Engel also said that when a sub-

on was considered neurotic.

Engel also said that when a subject is shown something red and asked to state the first thing that comes to their mind, there are 'sometimes the kinds of feelings that are associated with Valentine's

"It may be, however, that the cor-relation between Valentine's Day and red simply came from our asso-ciation between the heart and emo-tion, and we think of the heart as being red," he said.

Well, OK, so maybe Valentine's Day is red simply because of the layman's views on the heart — what's wrong with that? Once more, can you imagine giving your loved one a blue box of candy?

Aphrodisiacs

UK pharmacy professor dispels beliefs about sexual enhancers

By J.T. HOUNCHELL Staff Writer

So you've found the man or woman of your dreams and things couldn't be better. Valentine's Day is just around the corner and lately you've noticed your lover would rather spend more time studying anatomy and physiology than conducting personal research in the field.

Exploring monogamy and safe sex have dulled your senses and you need some stimulation. An aphrodi-siac.

But do aphrodisiacs really exist? "Only in people's minds," according to R.D. Cobb, an associate professor in the UK College of Pharmacy. On the other hand, Cobb says, if you believe in something strongly enough, anything might be effective. An aphrodisiac is "anything that intensifies sexual desire," according to Melloni's Illustrated Medical Dictionary. The word is a derivitive from Aphrodite, the Greek goddess

Tom Apircone, one oreest goudess of love.

Typically, aphrodisiacs come in the form of an over-the-counter drug, as do the infamous Spanish Fly Drops. Others are believed to be found in certain foods, like oysters, chocolate and egg yolks, Cobb says. An aphrodisiac "is supposed to be a substance that turns a person on to sex," he said.

Advertisements that claim to sell aphrodisiacs aren't selling the product on a medical basis, Cobb said.

"What they're selling in those ads is the placebo effect... the effect of the mind over the body," he said.

Manufacturers get away with this type of advertising by using the word "spurious," which means fake, before the name of their product.
Cobb said the closest thing to a possible aphrodisiac is alcohol. It releases a person's inhibitions, when used in small quantities, and "might make a person more amourous," he said.

If alcohol is consumed in high quantities it may cause problems for men. William Shakespeare described it best in his tragedy "Macbeth," Cobb said. "It provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance."

According to the Dictionary of Aphrodisiacs do exist but, "... their use generally involves grave hazards and must not be put in practice without due medical advice."

The book emphasizes various the past and those used traditionally for the purpose of heightening the sexual appetite.

If foods such as anchovies, bam-ososhots, bananas, carrots, onions, cheese, chocolate, fish, cola, garlic, grape juice, honey, escargot and truffles are used correctly, they "may aid in amatory directions."

James Cheney, manager of Peptab Alert/Diet Center, Inc., says aphrodisiacs are one of his best sell-some of the most common sellers of Aphrodisiacs do exist but, "... their use generally involves grave hazards and must not be put in practice without due medical advice."

sell under names like "Vice Spice" and "Manpower Pills" and come in time-released pill and liquid form. The prices range from $4 to $8.

Despite their wide use in the United States today, Cobb does not suggest experimentation with so-called aphrodisiaes in "any form or fashion."

rashion."
"Aphrodisiacs," according to Cobb, "are as elusive as the fountain of youth."
But Cobb adds, you cannot discount "the effect of the mind over the body."

HOW UK'S ADMINISTRATORS MET THEIR MATES

UK President David Roselle met his wife Louise while he was a graduate student at Duke University. Louise was a freshman in a class that David was assisting. She used to "go for extra help" a lot, Louise said.

Vice President for Administration Ed Carter met his wife Anne here at UK. The two were working in UK's accounting department at the time.

Chancellor for the Lexington Campus Art Gallaher met his wife Dixie while they were both students at the University of Oklahoma.

They were introduced to each other by a mutual friend.

Vice Chancellor for Administration Jack Blanton met his wife Sandra in Knoxville Tennessee. "We met through friends, kind of an accident I suppose," Sandra said.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs James Kuder met his wife Joan at Colorado State University. "I was a receptionist (at CSU)... and he was always a very nice voice on the phone," Joan said.

Acting Dean of Students Doug Wilson met his wife Davis while attending Oklahoma State University. They first met while "working on a homecoming display," Davis said.
