Some child-care options offered on UK campus

By Tammy Gay Senior Staff Writer

Senior Staff Writer

Child care can be an expensive problem — especially if the parents are college students who have to contend with the escalating costs of tuition and books.

Susan Byars, director of academic support services for adults, said many students do not have problems finding quality child care: they just can't afford what they do find.

UK offers limited child care on campus, Byars said, but her office also publishes a directory of child-care facilities in Fayette County to help students find services for their children. This directory contains the children. This directory contains the prices, locations and services of-

UK graduate has vision for theater

Actors' Guild closes in on 10 years with Chaney

By David Lavender

Everyone's heard the horror sto-

Everyone has shrieked with terror

Everyone as sheard une horror stories.

Everyone has shricked with terror as the veterans of academic wars described getting within a semester of graduation and finding out about one teeny-weeny class they inadvertently left by the wayside.

For Vic Chaney, having one class telet changed his life.

"In needed one class, and it was only offered in the fall. I didn't know that, so I had to go another year. So, rather than get a job and take the class. I thought I d't take all these other classes." Chaney said these other classes." Chaney said these other classes." Chaney said these other classes." Chaney had no theater experience. None. Zero. Zip. Nada. Not in grade school. Not in junior high. Not in high school. Not in his first three years of college.

In fact, he had not even been to see professional theater before he took his first theater class. Now he is artistic manager of the Actors' Guild of Lexington.

Although the year started out as wasted time, it soon became the year that Chaney waded deeper into the waters of stage performance.

By the end of the year, the Army brait from Princeton, Ky, was ready to dive into the deep end: He told his parents what had happened dur-

He completed his undergraduate studies in psychology and took the next logical step: He enrolled in graduate school in theater.

"I ended up liking the theater classes a lot," Chaney said. "In fact, I decided to go to graduate school in theater rather than psychology, much to the chagrin of my parents. They didn't understand what was eoine on."

They didn't understand what was going on."
What was going on was that Chaney had gotten a taste of what would soon become his life's love and ambition: theater.
"I went through all of graduate school feeling behind, going to school with people who had been in theater since kindergaren," Chaney said. "I don't think that left me for a long time."

side. I don't think that left me for a long time."

While Chaney was in graduate school, five people started an organization called Actors' Guild. He wasn't among the original five but joined them about a month later.

"At the time, the theaters around Lexington weren't doing the kind of plays that we wanted to do," Chaney said. "Also, the University of Kentucky wasn't doing the kind of plays we wanted to do, which were new plays."

The program started as a summer project. The first play, "The Wager," which Chaney said had a budget of about $100, was a disaster. Despite the obstacles, the Actor's Guild scored big with its second play "Veronica's Room."

Chaney said he and the other group members went into the theater business totally blind and a lot of things should have killed them. Their first business manager, for example, embezzled nearly $4,000 from their already meager fund.

from their already meager fund.
Early in the Guild's existence,
Chaney and his cohorts took an arts administration class, which he credits with solidifying the group's organizational skills.
"We were sort of taking classes and running the company at the same time, which was extremely lucky for us," Chaney said.

moved from Artsplace into its own theater on West Short Street last September.

The Guild has come a long way, baby, from the days of $100 budget shows. It now boasts three full-time staff members, its own home and an annual budget of about $200,000, because of funding from the Kenucky Arts Council, grants, fundraising campaigns and, of course, ticket sales.

Chaney credits the Guild's nine-member collective group as the reason for the group's longevity. Everyone in the group has equal importance, and majority rules on all decisions, he said.

Despite its success, Chaney is reluctant to call Actors' Guild a fully professional theater until it can meet certain criteria, like being able to pay actors about $1,500 for a run. "There's no one to call us on it,"

"There's no one to call us on it," said Chaney about using the term professional theater. "It's just a personal thing."

Nonetheless, it doesn't take long for Chaney to start talking about the line actors that come through Actors' Guild, like Kevin Hardesty and Kevin Haggard.

"Lexington is very odd. A lot of actors come through here for many reasons. They've been to New York and they get tired of it, or they've been to California and get burnt out.

"The actors who work with us are just as good as the actors you see in New York. I know that's hard to get into people's heads, but it's true."

Frankly, my dear, Brett Butler doesn't give a damn about the stere-otype of gentile Southern women. This native Georgian does what she

"The Vanishing" Starring Jeff Bridges, Kiefer Su-therland and Nancy Travis Twentieth Century Fox

By Jason T. Garrett

The cardinal rule of successful psychological thrillers: Moviegoers love a good villain.

We love the meckness of Norman Bates in "Psycho," the mind-games of Hannibal Lecter in "Si-lence of the Lambs," the sweet but brutal Annie Wilkes in "Misery," We all have our favorite evil characters who keep us sinking in our seats.

"The Vanishing" supplies us with yet another creepy antagonist in the form of Barney Cousins, a timid chemistry professor trying his hand at the dark side.

The plot is deceptively simple. Jeff Harriman (Kiefer Sutherland) and his girlfriend Diane Shaver (Sandra Bullock) are on vacation in Washington, They stop at a gas statement of the professor of the makes himself known to Harriman, causing some substantial blows to his face and body in the process. He wipes off some blood and begins to chat with Jeft: "In order for you to find out what happened to Diane, you must experience what she experienced."

This is the part in thrillers where the audience begins yelling at the screen, "Uh-uh! Don't do it, Kiefer!" But do they ever listen? Nope. Not gonna happen.

rimental to your viewing experi-ence, but I will say that the film ends with the usual, desperate battle royal, in which somebody buys it in the end.

Director George Sluizer received wide international acclaim with his 1988 Dutch film "Spoorloos," from which "The Vanishing" has been remade for American audiences. Apparently, he had no trouble crossing over.

Bridges has done a fantastic job at transforming himself into this quiet monster. From his calm, tortoiselike mannerisms to his slight speech impediment, he really gets under your skin. Watching him practice his victim's capture really reminded me of DeNiro.

He seems to have gone through a severe physical transformation for this part, in both age and size. If you compare him in 1991's "Fisher King" to this film, he looks like two different people. It's frightening.

Sutherland gives another believa-ble performance as the man in search of his lost love, but his char-acter is almost completely overpow-ered by Barney in the last half of the film.

kider Southerland is Jeff Harriman and Nancy Travis is Rita Baker in 'The Vanishing,' a psychocred by Barney in the last half of the film.

Travis, however, is one of the better reasons to see this film. She brings humor and emotion to the story, with much more substance than the missing Diane.

She recently appeared in "Chaplin," but she is probably best te-membered for her roles in "Three Men and a Baby" and its sequel.

Interfraternity Council should adopt policy for deferred rush in Spring

EDITORIAL

The Interfraternity Council Rush Revision Committee is considering a plan that would eliminate fall rush and create a deferred rush

The plan would require incoming freshmen to wait until the semester before they could participate in rush.

IFC President Mike Wainscott said the new system would give freshmen a "better chance to get adapted to school, and maybe that will (raise) their grades."

If rush is pushed back, students will be able to spend more time getting used to college life, and if they decide to go greek in the spring, they will have had a period of adjustment to examine their

If IFC selects deferred rush, the organization should include a clause in the new proposal that allows for bids to be distributed to upperclassmen interested in rushing in either fall or spring.

A decision to join a fraternity is a big commitment. Freshmen should not rush into anything for which they are not ready.

Human life began with blacks

In regard to Jimmy Gish's "The world could use more Christians" in the Feb. 4 edition of the Kentucky Kernel: Jimmy, I believe that you are a good person and that you mean well, but your article is somewhat incorrect. It is not your fault, but your so-called forefathers' fault. Lavish you had attended the Awake Locture Series.

First, let me start by saving that First, let me start by saying that Africans were the first on this planet. We ruled the world. (Yes, that's what I said,) Secondly, I would like to point out to you that the Bible was written before King James created his version. Africans called it "The Book of Coming Forth By Day," When the Greeks found it, they renamed it the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

of the Dead.

I hate to break your heart, but the Ten Commandments are derived from "The Negative Confession." The Negative Confession is 42 confessions that one must do on Judgement Day in front of God. These 42 confessions are located in the Egyptian Book of the Dead and on plates 31 through 32.

I advise you find a copy of the Egyptian Book of the Dead and compare it to today's so-called Holy Bible. Don't get me wrong, I'm not saying the Bible is false doctrine; I'm just saying that I would rather read from the source than the variations.

John Henry Clark said: "We are the great believers; we believe in democracy more than the white America, we believe in Christianity more than white America. ... We actually practice it more than white America and because we came out of (an African) society where a great deal of this was practiced before anyone put a name and the added dogma around the subject gives us the impression that the creators of the dogma created the concept."

Reflections on Love

Local castle carries true message of love

m. — Henry David Thoreau

One of the most romantic places in the world is a place I've never really visited — the castle located on Versailles Road in Woodford

When I first came to UK as a freshman, I heard many stories about the legend of that castle I en-joy looking at so much. Based on those stories, I've come to think of that place as the best Valentine

The legend, the way I've heard it, involves a man who came to Lexington from Europe. He was very much in love with a woman who lived in a castle in England.

While he knew he had to leave Europe for America, he also knew he would do anything for the love of that woman. She promised to come with him to America if he would build her a castle like she had back in Europe.

He began building the castle and she joined him in America, but he went broke before he could finish the project and his lower left him alone. I'm told that he died in the unfinished castle—alone.

Later, an elderly lady bought the castle and finished it as a symbol castle and finished it as a symbol of the completion of his dedication to loving that one special woman.

Today, the castle is owned by an individual who is trying to sell it. Whether the story I've relayed is

I believe the dream of perfect love held by that courageous man is what love between two people is all about. You set your goal, no matter how high or unreachable it may appear, and then you build a foundation.

Boyfriends at home change relationships

Sunday is Valentine's Day, a day when most girls seem depressed for some unknown reason. The exception are those girls with boyfriends — or really close friends who surprise them every year with a card and a stuffed cow.

A very close and dear friend of mine did receive a cow and card this year, just as she did last year and probably will next year. It is a gesture that shows a deep, sincere "I really care for you" type of love, which only close friends can know.

Not only does Valentine's Day enable friends an opportunity to show appreciation for each other, it invokes visions of a more romantic love. We all know the scene: Lights turned down low, a dozen roses and a box of candy on the table, deep gazes into the each other's eyes, You get the point. It's all just a scene out of a cheap romance novel.

Ave. but what wonderful images el.

Aye, but what wonderful images it does conjure up. I am a romantic by my very nature. (I suppose most liberals are.) There is something about doing the "little things" that I enjoy.

arous using use conjoy.

I get almost as excited planning a romantic surprise (or more likely helping a friend plan a surprise for his girlfriend), as the girl who receives the gift.

UK does have one major drawback: The girls here all seem to have boyfriends. Whether he is in the dorn mext to hers or back home in Ohio (or some other place like that), they all seem to have boyfriends.

This can pose a problem to guys who won't try to take another guy's girl. This is a problem to guys like myself.

guys would settle upon that decision.

The second scenario is, if for some reason — whether she decided to date people at the campus she attends the majority of the year or she broke up with the other guy, you could actually end up dating that special girl.

Although the second option is the one most guys prefer, the first option is just fine.

And who knows, this year your gift might be a card and a stuffed pig named Floyd, but next year could just be straight from a romance novel.

Looking for someone to be my valentine

I was walking through the local Hallmark store checking out all the wonderful cards in honor of Cupid's favorite day.

There were sweet ones and mushy ones, cheap ones and perverted ones. There was a card for almost every kind of Valentine's Day you could wish to have. My heart began to flutter until I realized... I don't have a valentine!

I guess this time of year is great if you are in love, but are the rest of us supposed to feel like huge weenies? Honestly, I have never had a valentine, so this year I decided to change that.

I started calling those 1-900-BIG, I MEAN REALLY BIG. USER lines, until I realized "Sabrina, the Mistress of Love" was only interested in my credit card number.

I tried the personal ads. I even brina, the Mistress of Love" was only interested in my credit card number.

I tried the personal ads. I even auditioned for the TV show "STUDS." all with equally bad luck. Then I realized the answer to my Valentine's dilemma was staring me right in the face (or at least my pseudo-balding mug shot).

On a campus with some of the most beautiful women in the country. I decided to have a contest involving my readers. No gimmicks. No tricks. No Ed McMahon. And the only prize is me.

I decided to end my search for a valentine and let her choose me. Thus, the "Be My Valentine Contest" was born. The ground rules are simple: You write down in a couple of paragraphs why you would want to be my valentine. Also include your picture. (After all, you have mine).

A panel of experts will choose the best (or only) response, and the lucky winner will get a date with me that will be documented in an upcoming column.

I have to be crazy for even trying this. Oh, yeah, no guys need applied to the control of the co

Foul play may be connected to Erikson fire

By Ernest A. Jasmin Staff Writer

Foul play may be connected with a fire that started Tuesday night on the first floor of Funkhouser Building.

UK police and the Lexington Fayette Urban County Fire Department are investigating the possibility that the fire was intentionally set, officials said.

The fire started in a trash can in room 107 some time before 8 p.m. It triggered a smoke detector, which set off alarms at the UK Police Department and a Lexington fire station.

The only items damaged in the fire were the trash can and its contents, according to fire department records.

Gregory Brock, an associate professor of family studies, said he had finished teaching a class about 20

ited in the area

He said he followed the smell of He said he followed the sinen of smoke to its strongest concentration on the first floor. Without discovering its specific origin, Brock returned to his office and called the fire department, he said.

"Four to five minutes after I called it in, the alarm went off," he caid.

Room 107 is used by three teaching assistants from the design department of the College of Human Environmental Sciences.

One of the three, Brenda McClanahan, said she left the room around 7 pm. to go to the computer lab at Margaret I. King Library.
McClanahan said Laura Teter, one of the other two teaching assistants, was comine in as she was the room briefly until around 7:20 p.m.

Mora said the room was unoccupied when he arrived. He said he decided to leave the room unlocked when he left because it was unlocked when he arrived and he did not want to lock anyone out.

McClanahan said she returned to the building from the computed said around 9:15 p.m. and saw the police and firefighters.

Teter said the others returned to the building at about 8:45 p.m. The three were questioned by investigators, she said.

Some aspects of the fire seemed odd, McClanahan said.

It also was unusual that the door to the room was locked because Mora had left the door unlocked, she said.

Teter said the three teaching assistants and the faculty members who work in Funkhouser have keys that fit the locks of every door in the building.

McClanahan estimated there were five or six students on the floor around the time the fire was reported. Mora said some students told him they were there when the fire was burning.

Teter said a few drawings and a T-square were charred by the fire, and the room suffered some smoke damage.

"It still smells (like smoke)," she said. "We don't stay there much

Gunman surrenders after hijacking plane

NEW YORK — A young gunman seeking asylum in the United States hijacked a jetliner with 104 people aboard yesterday and forced it from Austria to New York, where he quickly surrendered.

No one was injured during the 11-hour ordeal, the first transAtlantic hijacking in more than 16 years. Seven Americans, including a Louisville, Ky., man working for the Presbyterian Church USA, were among the passengers on the Lufthansa Airbus 310.

Jeff Ritchie, associate for in-ternational evangelism and church development, left Chica-go for Ethiopia on Wednesdy and was aboard the hijacked plane, said Katharine Bartlett, administrative assistant to the church's director.

The hijacker was Nebiu Ze-

UK students donated 191 pints of blood this week during a collection drive sponsored by the UK Residence Hall Association and the Central Kentucky Blood Center. The drive took place at Kirwan-Blanding Complex Commons and Haggin and Holmes halls.

The drive surpassed its goal by 31 pints. Trina Hembree, a spokes-worm for the blood center, said when as pleased with the results. She credits UK students Kristin Mathis and Amy Muller for helping make the drive a success.

The hijacker had made three demands, said police detective Dominick Misino: that the plane go to Kennedy International Airport; that he receive political asylum; and that the United States intervene in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The plane was hijacked over Austria during a flight from Frankfurt, Germany, to Cairo, Egypt, and Addis Ababa, Ethio-er, Germany, where it was refueld, German officials said they allowed it to take off for New York because the gunman threatend to kill hostages.

German authorities also said the hijacker gave assurances he would surrender once he arrived in the United States.

UK parking violation issued prior to the start of the blood drive.

UK students have donated a total of 755 pints of blood this year, Hembree said. The blood center will total this with additional pints donated by students throughout the semester to produce a yearly count.

Hembree said she hopes students will improve on last year's total of 1,037 pints.

I re-entered cautiously and looked at Officer Tim Mallory. He was still on the floor, but he had taken off his cushioned helmet and was loosening the rest of his protective suit. He looked up at me and grainned.

"I felt all of those last kicks." he said. "Good job?"

Officer Holly Davis walked up to me and shook my hand. I had forgotten that she was in the room during the simulated attack. She asked me if I was OK. When I sald that I felt fine, she congratulated me on a job well done.

The simulated attack was the final stage of the four-day Rape Agression Defense Systems course. It was the most difficult part of the class for me because I felt like I was going to be raped at any moment if I did not get away.

I hope this simulated attack is a close as I ever come to being attacked. I feel confident, though, that after taking RAD, I can defend my-self and escape an assailant.

That is the objective of RAD: to teach that survival is possible.
