SGA Senate upset over presidential search committee

Resolutions call for BOT to change search process

By GREGORY A. HALL
Staff Writer

The Student Government Association Senate unanimously passed two measures last night to reform UK's presidential selection process.

The special meeting, called by SGA President Sean Lohman Tuesday night, was in reaction to Board of Trustees Chairman Foster Ockerman's decision not to appoint Lohman to the presidential search committee at Tuesday's BOT meeting.

The first measure passed was a resolution to amend the University's governing regulations, transferring the power of the appointment of the student member from the BOT chairman to the SGA.

The resolution will be presented to the Board of Trustees at its next meeting in February.

The second measure is an amendment to the SGA Constitution giving the president the power to appoint the student member to the presidential search committee, pending approval by the Senate.

Lohman said that he will take the measures to the Faculty Senate Council and to the Faculty Senate for their support, making the resolutions concurrent.

"The concept, I think, is correct," said council chair-elect Carolyn S. Bratt. "I would be supportive (depending on the wording)."

"Why should the governing regulations stay as they are if the faculty knows what's best for the faculty and the community colleges know what's best for the community colleges and Foster Ockerman knows what's best for the student body?" said Cyndi Weaver, the primary sponsor of the measure and a former SGA president.

Ockerman chose Teel Bruner, a third-year medical student, to be the student representative on the search committee. The London, Ky., native did his undergraduate work at Centre College in Danville, Ky.

Lohman is a history junior from Prospect, Ky.

The Senate also discussed a resolution that would expand the current search committee to include another student member.

Lohman said the proposal could be brought to the Senate as a res-

Ockerman, BOT ignored students, senators say

By TOM SPALDING
Executive Editor

The decision by UK trustees to leave Sean Lohman off the presidential search committee shows how little respect many trustees have for students, several student leaders said last night.

"We haven't been taken seriously for a long time," said Kennedy James, a former SGA senator at large. "Now we're seeing what (high-level administrators) really think of students at UK."

On Tuesday trustees voted to uphold BOT Chairman Foster Ockerman's appointment of Teel Bruner, a third-year medical student, as the student representative on the 10-person search committee to pick a successor to David Roselle.

The Student Government Association Senate passed a resolution last week calling for SGA President Sean Lohman to be named to that spot. Ockerman appoints the student on the search committee as well as five trustees.

But students interests were ignored when Lohman was left off the committee, some student leaders said.

"It's a blatant, outright gesture to tell us that (trustees) don't care what students say," James said.

Carolyn S. Bratt, one of the three faculty trustees on the search committee, said she could understand why students are upset.

"Anytime that the organization charged with speaking for students doesn't get to do that, it is an undercut," she said.

And although Lohman admitted that students had little recourse, but to accept Ockerman's decision, not all are giving up the fight to have their student body president appointed.

In a special Senate meeting last night, SGA unanimously passed two measures to restructure the selection of the presidential search committee.

But some feel that it's too little, too late.

"For so long we've listened to on the Board of Trustees," Lohman said. "But the one thing I can promise students is that, by God, that they'll know that students are here."

James said that things were different when Lohman was left off the committee, some student leaders said.

Universities must prove their worth, Baesler says

By RHONA BOWLES
Contributing Writer

Kentucky's colleges and universities need to perform a "sales job" if they are going to receive state support for more funding, Lexington Mayor Scotty Baesler told a group of about 15 political science professors and students yesterday morning.

"I think it is incumbent upon the higher education system to do a little better selling job of their schools rather than just 'send us more money, we're going to do good,'" Baesler said.

"Higher education institutes need to take the opportunity to explain to the public general what they can do with more money."

Schools also need to explain specifically how they plan to achieve their goals and what effects they will have on the state, he said.

"Generally speaking, statewide, most people have not had the exposure to higher education," Baesler said.

than one year of college. Consequently, many people are not aware of what higher education offers, Baesler said.

Baesler used research as an example of how UK can boost its fundraising efforts.

"We have an outstanding research program here at UK," and it is imperative that "research components demonstrate to the public why we need more money and what has been resulting from what we've been doing," he said.

Several areas in higher education need more funding, Baesler said.

"We've got to do more for the teachers, whether it's more encouragement in the classroom ... whether it's money ... whatever."

Baesler also said that patience is important in the improvement of the state's educational system. "Education is like housing ... you think it's too big of an issue to do because you can't build enough houses. I think that's the wrong approach. You've got to be patient enough to take on one at a time, one teacher, one group of students ... keep on doing it and ... it will add up."

Theatre students upset that faculty member denied tenure

By ALLEN D. GREER
Senior Staff Writer

Three UK theatre students are planning to send petitions to University officials today expressing "strong dissatisfaction" over a recent decision to deny tenure to Patrick Kagan-Moore, a popular theatre professor.

Teachers who are denied tenure are granted a one-year "terminal contract" and must leave the University when the contract expires. "We feel that Dr. Kagan-Moore's performance as a teacher has been exemplary and we regard him as an invaluable asset to the university and its students," the petition said. "... (Those) responsible for this decision have not acted in (students') best interest."

The petition drive, which began Monday, has collected 66 signatures from UK theatre students, according to Rebecca Davis, one of the drive's organizers.

The petitions will be sent to Chancellor of the Lexington Campus Robert Hemenway, College of Fine Arts Dean Richard Domek Jr. and Theatre Department Chairman James Rodgers.

"We feel that Patrick Kagan-

Moore is one of the finest professors UK has," Davis said. "It would be a great disadvantage to our education here if we lose him. It's just about time we stopped being apathetic about everything and did something for him."

Kagan-Moore declined to discuss the issue.

Davis and two other students who organized the drive are scheduled to meet with Domek tomorrow morning to discuss the issue, according to theatre senior Tim Carter, who drafted the peti-

Wildcats botch 14-point lead as SEC road woes continue

By PAUL NEWBERRY
Associated Press

AUBURN, Ala. — UK's road woes continued last night as the Wildcats snatched a loss from the jaws of victory.

Derrick Dennison scored 27 points last night, including two free throws after a steal with 13 seconds remaining as Auburn rallied from a 14-point halftime deficit for a 74-70 Southeastern Conference victory over UK.

Auburn (6-11 overall, 3-4 in the SEC) tied the game at 70 when Chris Brandt hit a pair of free throws with 26 seconds to play.

UK (8-9, 4-4) set up for a potential game-winning shot, but Dennison stole a pass and drove toward the basket, where he was fouled by Sean Woods.

Dennison hit both free throws to put the Tigers ahead 72-70. Derrick Miller, who led UK with 21 points, missed a driving shot with five seconds left.

Zane Arnold grabbed the rebound and was fouled. Arnold hit both free throws to seal the victory, which gave Auburn more league wins than all of last season.

UK, which had a two-game SEC winning streak snapped, has yet to win on the road this season, dropping to 0-6.

Ronnie Battle scored 18 points for Auburn, Arnold 15 — including 12 in the second half — and Brandt 12.

Arnold also grabbed 18 rebounds as the Tigers held a 43-27 advantage on the boards.

For UK, Deron Feldhaus and Reggie Hanson each scored 17 points and John Pelpitrey added 10.

The Wildcats led by as many as 17 points in the first half and settled for a 44-30 lead at halftime as Miller scored 15 points and Feldhaus added 10.

But Auburn, which was 2-16 in the SEC last season, quickly got back in the game with a 17-7 spurt in the first seven minutes.

Dennison gave the Tigers their first lead since the opening minutes when he converted a three-point play with 9:45 remaining to make the score 58-57.

From there, the two teams swapped the lead six times.

In the first half, UK led 21-15 with 10 minutes to play, then went on a 19-8 burst which gave the Wildcats their biggest lead of the game, 40-23. Miller capped the run by converting a three-point play.

Freestyling to NCAA qualification

Lady Katfish hopes to repeat last year's goals

By BRIAN JENT
Managing Editor

For some swimmers, returning to the water after a successful season can be intimidating and difficult. But Lady Katfish Bartley Pratt is having few problems adapting.

As a junior last year, Pratt became the first Lady Katfish to qualify for the NCAA Swimming and Diving Meet. The Huntsville, Ala., native also set UK swimming records in the 500-, 1,000- and 1,650-meter freestyle.

And she has left the starting blocks this season determined to make her senior season one to remember.

"I would like to finish off my swimming career on a good note, hopefully my best," Pratt said. "And, so far, the freestyler is doing just that."

At the Purdue Invitational last semester she broke her 500-meter freestyle record by swimming it in 4:52.42. She also teamed with Wendy Hipskind, Jocelyn Danko and Kellie Moran to break the 800-meter freestyle relay record during that meet.

Pratt, however, said that she is not concerned with holding records, and she said that she hopes her records will be shattered by younger, more talented athletes in the future.

"It feels good to have these records, but I hope the records don't stay because I want (UK) to get better and better," she said.

Pratt's unselfish attitude sets a positive tone for the team.

"She picks up our morale a lot," freshman Hipskind said. "During practice, she encourages (Margaret Boliver) and I. She says that we can help the team and stuff like that."

And the upperclassmen respect Pratt as well.

"She is a very good leader and gets behind everyone," junior Mary Jane Brown said.

Besides being a leader for the team, the coaching staff sees Pratt as a role model, not just in terms of swimming, but personally as well.

"I have a tremendous amount of respect for her," UK assistant coach Mark Klumper said. "She is not only a hard worker, but our team captain. In addition to that, she has had all the pressures which come with being a senior in college ... and a lot of demands on her time."

accounting major, was not only maintaining her high academic and swimming standards, but also trying to prepare for a career after college, which, of course, was not easy.

"It took a lot of time last semester, but really it comes down to budgeting your time better," Pratt said. "I'm looking forward to this semester because the interviews are all over, and I have a lighter course load. I will get the rest I need and can concentrate more on swimming."

And the added rest and her determination should help Pratt fulfill her season goal of returning to the NCAA Swimming and Diving Meet.

"I am pretty confident that I can make it a conference," she said.

Braves swap 2 to Mariners for Presley

Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Braves traded right-handed pitcher Gary Eave and a minor leaguer to the Seattle Mariners yesterday in exchange for third baseman Jim Presley.

Presley, 28, hit .236 with 12 home runs and 41 RBIs last season. He played in only 117 games due to a back injury.

"Presley is completely healthy now," Braves general manager Bobby Cox said. "He's a tough player, a gamer, who'll be good to have in the clubhouse. He should be the guy to supply us with the power we need. We'll keep an open mind about positions and will continue to try to make further deals."

Eave, 26, was 13-3 with a 2.80 earned run average for the Braves' Richmond farm club in the Triple A International League last season, and 2-0 with a 1.13 ERA in three games with the Braves last season.

The Mariners also received minor-league third baseman Ken Pennington.

Pennington, 23, hit .275 with 10 homers and 64 RBI with Durham of the Class A Carolina League. He will be assigned to Seattle's Triple A club at Calgary of the Pacific Coast League.

Presley, the Mariners' fourth-round selection in the June, 1979 draft, has a .250 career average with 115 homers and 418 RBI in 5 major league seasons. He averaged 26 home runs and 93 RBI per season from 1985-87.

In 1986, Presley was named to the American League All-Star squad. He hit 27 home runs and had 107 RBI that season.

UK tennis has high aspirations

By CRAIG HENDERSON
Contributing Writer

Even with two of the nation's more difficult schedules, the UK men's and women's tennis teams have their sights set this season on the NCAA Championships.

Both squads will play several of the nation's Top 20 teams, but both also have the talent this season to take on any opponent.

Members of the men's tennis team hope that even with the tough schedule they will be able to continue their recent rise to power in the world of collegiate tennis.

The Cats have finished in the top 10 for the last two seasons, and along with the Lady Kats have made three consecutive trips to NCAA postseason play.

Men's coach Dennis Emery, who is in his eighth year at UK, said he believes that he has enough young talent to make a strong showing this spring, even though he lost five of his top seven players from 1989, including Adam Malik, who turned professional.

"We're a young team with lots of good athletes at several positions. The team is playing better than I expected this early in the season, and we'll get better throughout the year," Emery said.

Junior Ian Skidmore, who likely will play No. 1 doubles with sophomore standout John Yancey, said that 1990 will not be a rebuilding year.

"We've lost good players, but we have good players now. There is great potential, and all of our guys are very enthusiastic," he said.

Some of Skidmore's spring goals include beating "the big teams" and making a good showing nationally.

"I, along with the others, would like to improve individually and build (toward) the NCAAs," Skidmore said.

Emery's goals this season include a trip to the national championships and having two of his players named to All-America lists. His squad accomplished both goals the past four seasons.

"We'd also like to finish in the top ten in the country," said Emery, whose team is ranked No. 14 in preseason polls.

UK is getting used to tough schedules. In 1989 UK defeated 12 teams on the Top 25 list and four teams in the top five. This year the Cats' schedule includes No. 2 Georgia and No. 9 California-Irvine.

Yancey, who had a 24-15 record in 1989, will play in the No. 1 singles spot. Another top player, junior Sammy Stinnett, suffered a stress fracture in his hip last summer and will sit out this season. Stinnett will have two years of eligibility when he resumes play in the fall.

Fieri, aggressive and dynamic as words coach John Dinnen uses to describe his 1990 Lady Kats.

"We have fighters on this team that are going to go after people," Dinnen said. "We will dictate the flow of play, and this is important in college tennis."

The Lady Kats lost all-time win leader Sonia Hahn to graduation, and No. 1 prospect Jane Yates quit the team last fall, but Dinnen said he thinks his team will not let those events affect them.

"We are using this in a positive manner," he said. "Because of it, the six girls we will be playing have bonded together, realized their niche in the success of the team, and all are included in the system."

"On paper, we may not be as strong as some may have thought. But I think we'll be tough."

And like the men, the Lady Kats have a rough spring schedule with which to contend.

"We'll definitely take our lumps," Dinnen said. "Every match will be tough, and I don't see us getting a breather. But it's the only way to get better."

With only six players, it will be difficult for the women to score points. Upperclassmen contributing this spring are senior Lene Holm Larsen and juniors Helen Fabiszewicz, Melissa Nelson and Mindy Severt.

The UK women are hoping to qualify again for the NCAA Championships and to place among the Southeastern Conference's top three teams, Dinnen said.

ArtsPlace series showcases selections of local authors

Poetry, short fiction highlighted

By HUNTER HAYES
Assistant Arts Editor

The Lexington Arts and Cultural Council is sponsoring a series of monthly poetry and short fiction readings at ArtsPlace for its spring season.

The series, which showcases local authors, is designed to bring recognition to the talent in central Kentucky and to make people aware of the entire scope of the arts in the region.

Herb Wilburn, production coordinator for the council, said that "it's part of the council's policy to promote central Kentucky artists. Not only visual artists but also writers — that's the purpose of the program."

The series, which began Sun., Jan. 14 with an invitational reading by Mary Ann Taylor Hall, consists of works that were selected by a group of three jurors.

"We have a call each spring for people to submit their poetry and short fiction," Wilburn said. "They can submit ten type-written pages and the jury goes through and picks eight to ten people to read. Usually every year they invite one person who did not submit (any work) but is a well-known author — a central Kentucky author that they want to begin the series."

The jurors consist of one representative from UK, one from Transylvania University and a person who read in the series the previous year.

Two of the jurors, George Ella Lyon and Lance Olsen, read in last year's series but Olsen is serving as the UK representative, Wilburn said.

Olsen, a professor in the English department, said the jurors begin selecting the works for the series several months in advance.

"Early in the fall they send the manuscripts and (the jurors) have a couple of months to look them over," Olsen said. "Then we all met as a group and lo and behold there was a tremendous amount of agreement among the judges."

Of the 50-60 works that the jury had to choose from, eight were chosen for this year's series.

"The point should be made that these poems and fiction manuscripts when they come in, are anonymous," Olsen said. "There can't be any kind of personal biases and that kind of stuff. (The manuscript) has to be something that hasn't been published or published very recently, so that chances are even if it is someone you know, you haven't seen the work yet. It's all done blind."

He said that deciding which stories to choose is done primarily on instinct but the manuscripts must meet certain criteria.

"A lot of it is based on intuition, what sort of jumps out on the page at you and grabs you either emotionally or aesthetically," Olsen said. "I certainly look a lot for control of language. In poetry, control of language, control of metaphor — that sort of thing. In fiction I look for a strong characterization and a sense of plot, also again language."

Olsen added that "what happens when you're reading these things the good pieces just jump off the page and grab you by the face and before you know it you have a list of what you think are the good pieces."

After each juror made his or her selections, they came together as a group and chose the finalists.

"We just had to go down our lists and say we agree on this one, we agree on this one," Olsen stated. "A couple of people had questions about one piece and the people who felt strong about it would argue. Then we would take a vote and see who wins it, as it were. Nine times out of ten everybody is ultimately convinced one way or the other. Then what we would do is pair them so there were two readings every night except for the invitational."

The process went smoothly for the jurors since all of them were able to work well together, Olsen said.

"I was really surprised because sometimes these judging things can be disastrous because egos are at stake," Olsen commented. "And that was not the case at all — it was very pleasant to work with these people. I've been in situations where you can just go on for hours and hours about something and just go around in circles."

"I think personalities meshed well enough that there were really no problems. We were sort of on the same wavelength from the very beginning, so it worked out very nicely."

All of the writers that the jurors chose must hail from either Fayette County or one of the surrounding counties.

To open the series for this season, the jurors selected Sadieville resident Mary Ann Taylor Hall to read from her story "The Banana Boat."

"What we did was to come with a couple of names," Olsen said. "Somebody that everybody heard really wonderful things about — each of us had read some of her stuff — was Mary Ann Taylor Hall, so we decided to invite her. It really paid off — it was a real winner. I was really happy that we ended up choosing her and she ended up accepting."

The series Evenings at ArtsPlace: Poetry and Short Fiction Readings is open to the general public and free of charge. The series readings will be held on Jan. 28, Feb. 25, Mar. 4, and April 8. All readings are held on Sundays at 7 p.m. ArtsPlace is located at 161 N. Mill Street.

Search committee bears Wilkinson's political stench

Anyone who was passing Patterson Office Tower Tuesday afternoon undoubtedly detected a foul stench coming from the 18th floor.

It's a stench that has been all too common at UK since Wallace Wilkinson became governor of the commonwealth more than two years ago.

At Tuesday's Board of Trustees meeting, Board Chairman Foster Ockerman appointed 10 people to a committee whose job is to nominate UK's next president to the full board.

Ockerman assured the public last month that an honest nationwide search would be conducted to find a replacement for David Roselle. We need not worry about politics, Ockerman told us.

After the circumstances surrounding Roselle's departure and the selection of Charles Wethington as interim president, the University community needed a strong, competent search committee that people could trust.

But just as Wethington was railroaded through by Wilkinson's political henchmen, the same disregard toward the University was shown in the selection of the presidential search committee.

Four of the trustees Ockerman appointed to the committee were either appointed or reappointed by Wilkinson, but the most offensive decision was snubbing student trustee and Student Government Association President Sean Lohman from the student representative position on the committee.

Ockerman bypassed Lohman in favor of Teel Bruner, a 25-year-old third-year medical student who appears to have had little contact with UK undergraduate life.

Bruner spent his undergraduate years at Centre College in Danville, Ky., and has never been a prominent figure on the Lexington Campus. In fact, few undergraduate student leaders even knew who Teel Bruner was before Tuesday's board meeting.

Although it appears that Bruner is a good medical student, we could think of a dozen undergraduate students who are better qualified to serve on the presidential search committee, all of whom have plenty of experience in dealing with campus life.

Ockerman's rationale for selecting Bruner was that it would ensure a voice for the Medical Center and the student body. But anyone who thinks that a medical student is in touch with the student body obviously has not been on a college campus recently.

Since Lohman enrolled at UK as a freshman, he has been involved with student issues, first as a member of the Freshman Representative Council, then as a senator in the SGA Senate and now as president.

Lohman might not have the record of being the school's most vivacious advocate of student rights and responsibilities, but many of his actions have reflected that of a student leader.

Following the trustees' meeting, Lohman was visibly upset by Ockerman's decision — and he should have been. In fact, Lohman should have been furious that the student body's interests were insulted.

Last week the SGA passed a resolution asking that Lohman be the student member on the committee, but it is apparent that to Ockerman student interests are far less important than satisfying the political appetite of his governor.

At the special meeting of the board in December, Lohman was one of the five trustees who voted against Charles Wethington being named UK's interim president.

Wethington is a close friend of Wilkinson, and Ockerman was appointed to the board by Wilkinson. The only reason, therefore, we can see that justifies not appointing Lohman to the committee is that he voted against the Wilkinson line.

And if that indeed is the reason, then it stinks.

Petty Kentucky politics already have contributed to chasing away one president, and it appears that good ol' boy politics will ensure that no one opposes Wethington this time.

Many people at this university are excited about the potential UK has to help the community, and those who place personal politics above the common good make a mockery of it. It is little wonder then that even with all the "talk" about education reform the state remains in such pitiful shape because cronies like Ockerman and other trustees are afraid to vote their consciences — if they have one.

Furthermore, we wonder what possible presidential candidates will think when they see a school in which state politics override educational interests. Enough to ensure that Wethington has no real competition?

Bruner has vowed to keep a "level head" and do his best during the presidential search, and we have no reason to believe that he will act to the contrary.

One way Bruner can ensure that undergraduate interests are represented is by meeting with several student leaders on a regular basis throughout the search process.

A presidents roundtable of the campus' student leaders was established last year for just such a purpose.

Serving on the committee that nominates a president is no small responsibility, and we certainly hope that Bruner begins now to research about UK's undergraduate life.

Choosing a new president is an important decision that will contribute either to the progress or regression of the University. And that first and foremost affects the well-being of the students who attend, or will attend UK, and for whom the University was established in the first place.

We hope the search committee, therefore, selects a president who will be more sensitive to the needs, wishes and importance of the student body than Ockerman.

Our Governor

Like him or not, you can never call him boring

You've really got to hand it to Gov. Wallace Wilkinson. (Well, actually, if you didn't hand it to him, he'd probably just swipe it when your back was turned anyway.) As soon as you cross the state line into Kentucky, the big blue "WELCOME TO KENTUCKY" billboard bids the weary traveler a friendly "howdy." But the greeting doesn't stop there.

Besides the sign, a 40-foot mannequin waves as cars cruise by. It's something to see the toothy grin as the head turns back and forth. In one hand, the keen observer will notice a handful of lottery tickets. The other hand grasps a draft card from the GED army.

And the mannequin's jacket lapel sports a snazzy campaign button: ME OR MARTHA IN '91 — EITHER WAY, A WILKINSON. You haven't lived until you've seen a giant likeness of the state's chief executive waxing poetic. Who is this mannequin, you ask? It's none other than Wallace Wilkinson himself, welcoming the out-of-state tourist to our humble commonwealth. Wallace Wilkinson — call him what you will, Official Head Honcho, the Big Cheese of the Capital, or even Grand Poobah of the Bluegrass. But regardless of which moniker you prefer, one fact remains crystal clear: he's the best governor this state has had since Martha Layne Collins.

The welcome sign also features Kentucky's new motto: "WE'RE OPEN FOR BUSINESS." This dandy slogan won't over many other equally delightful suggestions. The Governor himself was pushing for the closely-related "WE'RE NONE OF YOUR BUSINESS." The tobacco lobby wanted "ISN'T IT TIME YOU STARTED SMOKING?"

And we really are open for business. Want to buy Lincoln's birthplace? Just tear down the old log shacks and things, and you've got the perfect place for a Jiffy-lube or maybe a 24-hour yogurt shop. A landfill sounds like a nice idea. Or maybe a toxic waste dump. If you have any other ideas, just call Frankfort, where operators are standing by.

The governor is planning to use the capitol rotunda as an air-conditioned show place for used cars. Are you familiar with the old political phrase about how you "wouldn't buy a used car from that guy"? Now you can prove those cynics wrong. See the commonwealth's chief executive as he rolls back prices, not to mention odometers. Plus, they have free balloons for the kids!

It's a brilliant plan. But when it comes to brilliance, this governor is really full of it. It's easy to see he combines the qualities of many U.S. presidents: Reagan's concern for the poor and downtrodden, Nixon's strong commitment to public ethics, and George Bush's flair for the English language. This leaves many people wondering if Wilkinson himself could be presidential timber. If so, his wood is a trifle warped. Personally, I'd say he's really vice-presidential timber. I'm confident he could follow in the footsteps of a Dan Quayle. But then again, so could a common form of plant life.

I'm not sure what the governor's political plans are after he leaves office, but I have noticed an attempt on his part to broaden his appeal. He's now wearing eyeglasses during press conferences to win over the smart set. But, you ask, won't that alienate the stupid, another key voting bloc?

Certainly not. The governor still does one thing to keep his stupid supporters behind him. He opens his mouth.

U.S. policy misrepresents truth in El Salvador

The increasing polarization of Salvadoran society in the economic and political realms is a damning indictment of U.S. foreign policy in Central America. Present U.S. policy has categorized the uprising of the Salvadoran people as an extension of world communism instead of an indigenous expression of opposition to the inequalities of economic distribution. This misrepresentation has resulted in policy programs which respond to symptoms of social conflict — civil war — and not the underlying causes — inequity.

The percentage of the rural population without land exploded from 11 to 60 percent in the 30 years following 1950; inequalities in income distribution reflect similar patterns. Although the initial trend toward polarization cannot be directly attributed to American policy, the $4 billion in aid sent by Washington to El Salvador since 1980 has directly deepened this pattern and allowed the Salvadoran military to result in increasing levels of violence instead of reform and reconciliation.

In recent years, inequality has increased as real wages have declined by 65 percent, and 80 percent of the population is either under- or unemployed. Despite growing levels of violence, the government was either unable or unwilling to implement land reform. The large land owners who produce coffee for export to the United States have prevented any meaningful reform.

The government of El Salvador can be seen as a marionette manipulated by the U.S. by indirect pressure and monetary assistance.

Specifically, the U.S. is guilty in two specific areas. First, by subsidizing a regime which has tortured tens of thousands and killed between 60,000 and 80,000 civilians since 1981, the U.S. has facilitated the radicalization of the political spectrum. Priests, teachers, students, union members, social workers, parents, children — death became an ever-present nightmare for the people.

In 1980, two specific outrages were perpetrated by groups connected to the Salvadoran government. Four U.S. church workers were raped and murdered by military personnel while the Archbishop of San Salvador Romero was shot while saying mass in his church. Yet between 1980 and 1982, the U.S. increased its military aid to the military by 1,278 percent. These increases brought about changes in the way that the military carried out its killings.

Conventional wisdom had reported for the last three years that the civil war was a stalemate with neither side able to defeat the other. However, the guerrilla attacks on

San Salvador and other urban centers last November indicate that the rebels are now able to bring the war from the countryside, where it is sheltered by considerable peasant support, to the working-class districts and slums of the capital city.

The murder of the Jesuit priests is a possible indication that yet another round of military-endorsed terror is underway. Without U.S. military and economic aid to El Salvador the present government would be forced to share power, reform its policies or be overthrown.

Second, by equating elections with democracy, the U.S. has helped make legitimate the actions of the Salvadoran government in the eyes of Congress and the American people. In a country where the government supports terroristic rampages by the military and off-duty soldiers, where a significant part of the people are excluded from political participation, and where there is little freedom of the press, speech or assembly, democracy cannot exist.

Although these conditions characterize El Salvador, the Reagan and Bush administrations have labeled the political process democratic based on elections which were largely conceived, planned and implemented in Washington and fraudulently carried out in El Salvador. The elections of 1982 and 1984 were chiefly concerned with generating positive perceptions in the U.S. media and Congress, not with the development of democracy.

Current U.S. policy is directly responsible for the deaths of more than 60,000 civilians in El Salvador since 1980. The toll of human suffering cannot even begin to be captured in these mere statistics. The torture, rape, and mutilation of prisoners, the thousands of men and women who were dragged from their homes in the night only to be found weeks later dead in the city garbage dump — it is these abuses which must stop.

As we learned in Vietnam, a people fighting for justice and liberty can not be suppressed without whole scale destruction of both people and nation. Lessons from the past are still instructive.

UK important to city's future, Baesler says

Editor's note: Because of an editor's error, portions of this story did not appear in Wednesday's Kentucky Kernel.

By DAVID A. HALL Staff Writer

Change, but not too much. That is how Lexington Mayor Scotty Baesler described the growth of the city at Donovon Scholars Tuesday night at the Student Center.

is making sure it is still what we like 10 years from now.

And in keeping with tradition, Baesler said that Lexington will continue to work closely with the University during the 1990s.

"We want to continue working with the University because it is such an important asset to our community and we want to continue working with them," he said.

BAESLER

Baesler told about 150 people at the Lexington/Fayette County recently began several projects with UK, and the city has other ideas.

"Our work with the University is just beginning," he said. "Our relationship with our largest employer, that probably could be our greatest opportunity for cultural resources is right here at the University of Kentucky."

Among Lexington's projects with UK, Baesler cited a networking system in which 10 regional libraries, including the Margaret I. King Library, share information through the use of facsimile machines.

Another project with the University is the Virginia Place, a 16-unit apartment building that offers single mothers no-cost housing and day-care services while they attend school or job-training programs.

"We have talked to the University a couple of times about working out some arrangement where we could have Martin Luther King Boulevard and make it a connector between the University and downtown," he said.

The mayor said that he opposes closing Rose Street to through traffic, an idea that has been discussed by several area leaders, including Councilman at Large and UK dentistry professor Chuck Ellinger.

"It's not gonna happen, and I'm very much opposed to it because (Rose Street) is a main artery in Lexington and there is no place else (to send traffic)," he said.

Baesler also said that UK's Arboretum, which is in the early development stages, will not receive any additional funding from the city until the University adds to the $500,000 the city already has agreed to pay. "We are ready to pay $500,000, but ... we are going to have to get some green out of the University before we can do anything else."

'Kentuckian' portraits this week

Staff reports

Portraits for UK's 1990s yearbook, the Kentuckian, will continue to be taken today and tomorrow. This will be the last chance for students to appear in the 1990 yearbook.

Portrait sittings are free and are open to all undergrad, graduate and Lexington Community College students.

Portraits are taken daily 8:30 a.m.-noon and 1-5 p.m. in 029 Enoch Graham Journalism Building. Appointments, although not necessary, may be scheduled by calling 257-4005.

Proofs will be issued within about three weeks after the portrait. There is no obligation to buy any photographs.

House overrides Bush on Chinese student bill

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted overwhelmingly yesterday to override President Bush's veto of legislation protecting Chinese students from deportation, while Bush appealed to Republican senators to resist and help him keep open ties to the world's most populous nation.

The House vote of 390 to 25 sent the matter to the Senate, where both sides said the outcome of today's scheduled vote was in doubt.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley declared: "I don't think what's most on the minds of the members of Congress is the sensitivities of the present Chinese leadership. ... This is a leadership that has in our judgment failed to respect the rights of its own citizens."

"On the issue of China, the president has lost his credibility," said Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Asia subcommittee.

Bush pinned his hopes on the Senate, where both Democratic and Republican senators predicted a cliffhanger. The president, National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and Secretary of State James A. Baker III all were telephoning senators through the day.

Bush was publicly appealing to GOP senators to support him in the face of what he termed "crass politics" played by some supporters of the override.

The legislation would affect about 32,000 Chinese students in the United States on "exchange visitor" visas.

The bill would waive a legal requirement that those students return home for two years after their visas expire before returning to the United States or going elsewhere.

In addition, the bill would permit any Chinese student whose visa has expired — as many as 8,000 others — to remain in the United States as long as danger exists at home, and would allow Chinese students to work while in this country.

Bush vetoed the measure on Nov. 30 after it had passed unanimously in the House and by a voice vote in the Senate.

Chinese student groups have lobbied hard for an override of the veto, saying many of them would face political persecution at home because they supported the pro-democracy demonstrations that brought a violent government crackdown last June.

At the time Bush vetoed the bill, he ordered government agencies to adopt what he contends are essentially the same safeguards. The veto was simply an effort to preserve executive branch foreign policy prerogatives, he said, and to keep open the door for future student and cultural exchanges.

"I will not break faith with the Chinese students here. ... They were safe then, and they are safe now, and they will be safe in the future," Bush said at a White House news conference yesterday.

ferent during David Roselle's administration. "Roselle was the type of man who gave you a fair hearing," he said. "In this instance, we have no voice."

Some argued, however, that students haven't lost much political power.

"I think by and large the board members both appreciate and respect contributions the students have made," faculty trustee Ray Betts said. "I can attest to that."

One of the most beneficial changes in the 1970s, Betts said, was adding students "on governance boards at all levels ... the contributions a student makes is different but no less important than any other."

But Ockerman's decision sends an apparent signal, Lohman said.

"It shows a blatant disregard for students, not the Student Government Association," he said. "I don't think students can put their full trust into the selections committee. ... It was a slap in the face to students that are concerned."

SGA Senator at Large Allen Putman said that students "haven't suffered an image blow."

"People still have a lot of respect and know we tried to do what we could, and that the student body was railroaded," Putman said.

"If anything, we probably gained respect," he said. "They realize we're trying to overcome the politics which are playing into the University."

"I think that the powers that are trying to run this University realize the student body is an important part of this institution," he said.

What does SGA do from here?

"First of all we don't go and act like fools and act like kids that get some candy taken away from them," Lohman said. "We work from the point of intelligent people. We have to come to the realization that Foster Ockerman is probably not going to change who the student member is."

lution as early as next Wednesday's Senate meeting, but more research was necessary.

Lohman said that he does not question Bruner's academic qualifications or personal attributes.

"It's not a dead issue," Lohman said in an interview yesterday.

"The fact of the matter is that students are being shut out of the process for political reasons and for a vote I made." Weaver warned that Ockerman's decision to exclude Lohman from the search committee was not an attack on Lohman but the beginnings of a division between sectors of the University community.

Several senators spoke out against Ockerman's action.

"I'll be damned to let Foster Ockerman or anybody on that committee that is not a student speak for the students of this university," Senator at Large Ashley Boyd said.

"If we don't look after ourselves, it's obvious that they're not going to take care of us," said Senator at Large Allen Putman.

Despite criticizing Ockerman, senators said they must work with Bruner.

Student leaders to hold press conference today

By DAVID A. HALL Staff Writer

Student leaders from across the state will hold a press conference today at the Capitol Annex in Frankfort to show its support for Gov. Wallace Wilkinson's proposed funding for higher education.

Members of the Board of Student Body Presidents will be present for the conference, which is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. in 107 Annex.

"Basically, the Board will say that it is in support of the governor's budget that is now in the legislature and to urge that the legislature and the governor work together to uphold the numbers in the budget, or if the legislature could enhance it that would be great," said John Elder, state coordinator for the board's governmental relations.

The board, which represents the state's eight universities, also will discuss House Bill 60, a bill written by the student body presidents and sponsored by Rep. Ernesto Scorsone, D-75th, that would change the system by which a student is appointed to the Council on Higher Education.

"We are trying to change the nominating process, which we feel is unfair right now," Elder said. "The new bill would establish collective representation of all the state institutions in the commonwealth."

Elder said that under the new process, the eight study body presidents would submit three names to be recommended to the governor.

"The bill has a good shot at passing," Elder said. "We have several co-sponsors and really isn't that controversial."

Elder said the board is asking that students attend the conference to show student interest in higher education.

some concern about how well Pratt would fare because of the pressure from last season's success.

"I think a lot of times after a swimmer has had as good of a season as she did last year, it's tough to come back and prepare yourself to do it again," Klumper said. "It is a little scary to think that you made so much improvement the year before and might not be able to do it again."

But that was not the case with Pratt as she returned ready to train and make her final campaign one to remember.

"She is surpassing last year's achievements and has trained much better in following it up," Klumper said. "She has done an excellent job of following up."

Theatre students upset that faculty member denied tenure

tion. Members of the theatre department's Student Activity Council met with Rodgers last week to talk about UK's tenure process.

Many students said that Kagan-Moore is a talented teacher and said they can't understand why his tenure was denied.

"It came as a shock because Patrick's care and concern and teaching are so strong," said Todd Lacy, a theatre graduate student who also helped organize the petitions.

But Rodgers said that issues such as research and service to the community and University also must be considered when deciding to grant tenure.

"Patrick's a wonderful teacher and that's why I understand that students are upset; that's the part that they see," Rodgers said. "But I don't think that they recognize that there are other areas."

Rodgers declined to discuss why Kagan-Moore was denied tenure, saying that it was confidential information. He did say, however, that the teacher plans to appeal the decision.

"We know that Patrick is a good teacher, but we've not been given any reason why he's been denied tenure," said theatre sophomore Joey Ralston. "It's frustrating for us."

Theatre senior Greg Slagle said he is upset because he suspects that Kagan-Moore was denied tenure because of a lack of research and publications.

"The college is supposed to be for the students," Slagle said. "And now, when they throw away a good teacher like Patrick, they re-emphasize that the school isn't for the student — it's for research."

UK's expectations of research, service and teaching are explained to all faculty candidates before they come here, Rodgers said. "We try to be up-front about that," he said.

UK's tenure process begins when a tenure candidate prepares a dossier containing information that includes teaching experience, educational background, professional activities, publications and research.

The dossier also can include letters from current or past students, as well as letters of evaluation solicited from professionals by the department chairman.

The dossier is then made available to current tenured faculty in the department, who write evaluations that are sent, along with the dossier, to the department chairman. The faculty letters are confidential to encourage candid evaluation, Rodgers said.

The chairman then reviews the dossier and faculty evaluations before writing his own letter of evaluation. The chairman's letter is then sent to the dean of the college, who has appointed a committee from faculty in a similar "academic area."

This committee assesses the information and passes its evaluation on to the dean, who decides whether to send a recommendation on to the next level.

If the dean forwards a recommendation, another committee looks at the tenure candidate's dossier and related information. The committee is comprised of individuals from departments throughout UK, Rodgers said.

A recommendation from the committee is then passed on to the appropriate chancellor, who can comment on the recommendation before sending it to the president.

The president then submits the proposal to the Board of Trustees, who vote on whether to grant tenure to the candidate.
