DESIGNED FOR LIVING

A typical super-block at Greenbelt, Md., the Resettlement Administration's suburban community being built with relief labor for 1,000 low-income families ten miles northeast of the White House. Features: No house faces a backyard or street, resulting in small service courts and large interior play areas...Garages are handy...All walks inside block, none along roads...Pedestrian underpasses at vital points...Super-block pattern means no through traffic, considerable savings in road construction and room to live in.
