Following is a recommendation of the College of Arts and Sciences:

"At its meeting on March 31, the faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences approved the proposal to establish non-credit courses in English and Mathematics for the benefit of freshmen who are found unable to carry successfully the regular freshman work.

It is proposed, beginning next September, to form special classes into which will be transferred those students whom the intelligence tests and achievement tests in English and Mathematics and the results of the first few weeks of the semester's work show to be unprepared for the freshman classes.

These special courses will meet three times a week and will give the students review and drill in the more elementary topics of English and Mathematics. No credit will be allowed for the semester's work but it is recommended that the records in these non-credit courses be included in computing the students standing for the semester.

The establishment of these courses will not require additional expense for instruction."
