Metro Police, equipped with three canine units, arrested seven UK students late Saturday night while attempting to disperse a crowd of about 400 in the 300 block of Aylesford Place.

According to Metro Police Sgt. J. Glindmeyer, officer in charge at the scene, 11 officers were called in response to 37 complaints from area residents.

Witnesses and police interviewed Sunday said units first arrived at the scene around 8:30 p.m. Saturday and two more times before the canine units (one police officer with one dog) were called and arrests began at approximately 11:30 p.m.

According to Glindmeyer and several witnesses, police attempted to move the crowd from the street twice before arrests were made.

Glindmeyer said he requested canine units because "we were simply outnumbered and nobody responded to dispersal orders."

Witnesses said one empty beer can struck a police car and at least one bottle was hurled at a police van. Glindmeyer said "they threw beer bottles and cans."

Police issued several verbal warnings over public address loudspeakers at about 10 p.m., according to witnesses, and an area resident also asked the crowd to disperse. "We gave them plenty of time and warning," Glindmeyer said, "but when they wouldn't break up, it was my best judgment to use the dogs."

At least two persons said they were attacked by the dogs, which police restrained with leashes.

Glindmeyer said the dogs were not given attack commands.

Alvin H. Green, 21, business administration junior, said he was attacked when he tried to enter the Sigma Pi fraternity house on the South end of Aylesford, where he is a member.

Becky Smith, arts and sciences sophomore, said a dog snapped at her leg as she attempted to enter her apartment, in response to a police directive. Glindmeyer said he knew only of the attack on Green.

Green said he and a friend were returning from LaRosa's restaurant at about 11:30 p.m. and saw police with dogs patrolling the area.

"There was a dog in front of our house," Green said, "and when I tried to walk by, it jumped and bit my arm. (Then) the officer with the dog told another officer to grab me."

Green was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and failure to disperse, according to the police arrest record. "I sure didn't think I'd be arrested," Green said, "I thought they wanted to see my arm."

Cats bounce Oregon State 38-13

By JOE KEMP

Those who have been bad-mouthing the UK football team for the past 10 months (blush) may have to eat their words — at least this week.

Utilizing its wishbone offense with surprising effectiveness, Kentucky clobbered Oregon State 38-13 Saturday at Commonwealth Stadium before 56,723 stunned fans. It was the most points scored in a season opener since 1958, when the Wildcats smashed Hawaii 51-0. And it was coach Fran Curci's fourth straight opening-game win without a loss.

But more important than those pieces of trivia were the performance of quarterback Derrick Ramsey, the running backs and the offensive line.

Ramsey, the 6-5 junior whose abilities as a quarterback were questioned during pre-season practices, silenced his critics over the weekend by running for three touchdowns and passing for two others, his best day as a collegian.

"I did a fair job I thought," he said. "I called 85 per cent of the plays and had a fairly good play selection. I forced the ball on my two interceptions. On that long interception I threw (in the third quarter), I think I could have scored myself. I'll work on that this week."

Head coach Fran Curci was pleased with Ramsey:

"He did it when he had to. He called all the touchdown plays except the first one," said Curci.

That "first one" was a 17-yard scoring pass to running back Greg Woods on the second play from scrimmage.

Woods somehow found himself all alone in the Beaver secondary.

"Yeah, the cornerback came up and he didn't know what was going on, so I slipped in behind him," said Woods, a smile spreading across his face.

Curci said that particular play had a choking effect on OSU.

"It was like a buzz saw hit them," he said. "They have a good team, have an excellent receiver (in Dwayne Hall), but when you rely on the throws exclusively, that can cause problems. I think. The momentum was just going our way."

Perhaps more surprising than Ramsey's quick touchdown pass was UK's wishbone offense, which netted 346 yards on the ground, with help from offensive lineman Warren Bryant and company.

Woods was the leading rusher, darting for 99 yards in just eight carries. Ramsey carried the ball 14 times for 83 yards.

"I don't feel that much pressure now," said Woods. "I feel at ease back there. The hard part was last spring, moving back and forth between offense and defense."

"I think we proved that we can move the ball. We just put it together today, and you know, I think our offense is more of a DRIVE this year."

"Yeah, I was surprised (with the margin of victory)," Woods added. "I thought we would do all right, but I didn't think we would get 38 points in the first half."

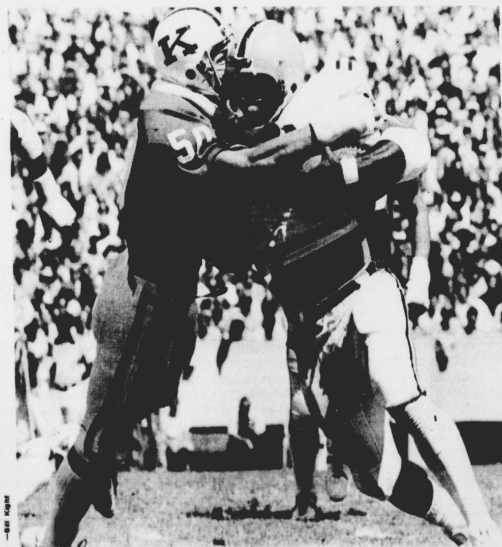

Wide receiver Charlie Dickerson said he was impressed with Kentucky's offensive attack:

"Our wishbone is not the Texas type, or not like Oklahoma's. We do things with our running backs. They're not the 'three yards and a cloud of dust' types. They all have good speed and moves. I think they showed that."

Dickerson then defended Derrick Ramsey, his roommate.

"I don't know why people keep on talking about Ramsey's throwing. We're close and I've always known he could throw. Oh, he'll throw 'em end-over-end every once in a while, but Billy Kilmer (Washington Redskins' quarterback) does that. He leads them and throws 20 touchdown passes a year. Ramsey is like him, you see, he can throw the ball too."

Council must act now on funding for RCC

After playing games with the Rape Crisis Center (RCC) for nearly a month, it appears the Urban County Council is going to once again shoot down the center's request for aid.

Looking ahead to Thursday evening's council meeting, the center needs to come up with nine votes—a two-thirds majority of the 15-member council—to receive a $701 allocation that was approved at a work session last week. The amount is half of what is needed for the center to qualify for a $23,000 grant from the Kentucky Crime Commission in conjunction with the U. S. Law Enforcement Administration.

The $701 allocation was approved at the council work session Tuesday by an unofficial vote of 8-6. And, according to 4th District Councilwoman Pam Miller, the ninth vote may be hard to find. "...right now, I don't know where the other vote is going to come from."

Although the 8-6 margin would be enough to pass the resolution authorizing Mayor Foster Pettit to apply for the $23,000 grant, the same vote would not be enough to pass the ordinance to amend the government budget for the allocation. Nine votes are needed to pass budget amendments.

The council had previously denied the center's request for aid. In a mid-August work session, council members wondered whether the center's services could not be provided by combining with existing health or service organizations.

But Patricia Elam, center director, said the RCC would rather maintain its autonomy.

Later in August, the council reversed its position on funding for the center. By a vote of 7-6, the council said it would provide "in-kind" assistance for the center, such as office space, in lieu of the needed funds.

The state requires, however, that cash be used to match federal grants. Now it is up to the council to take its final step Thursday and resolve this controversy. Final action on this issue should have been taken long ago. After Thursday night's vote, less than two weeks remains before the Sept. 27 deadline for filing for the federal grant.

Even though about $500 has been donated to the center, the council could have made it much easier on the RCC by eliminating this deadline pressure.

According to the Bruce Boyle, of the RCC, the center has helped in increasing the number of rapes reported. One of the center's main objectives is to educate women and help them understand that they are victims and not criminals.

Police reports of forcible rape in Kentucky increased during the first six months of 1976 by 35 per cent over figures for the same period last year. It is speculated that the additional number of reports is because of an increase in the number of incidents reported as opposed to more rapes actually having occurred.

The center also gives the community an important service by providing confidential informational and counseling services to victims of sex crimes. With the federal grant, the center hopes to expand counseling services to relatives and friends of victims.

After keeping the center waiting with baited breath for nearly a month, the council has a chance to do what they should have done long ago—approve needed funds for the RCC. Better late than never.

Parking problem

As a holder of a C-2 permit, finding out about the "oversell" policy of the parking department answers a lot of questions I had about problems around the parking lots. After seeing both sides of the issue, I admit it's a profitable idea.

In fact, it's such a good idea that I suggest we turn over the operation of the entire University to the parking department. There are many benefits to be gained from this move. For example: classes. Everybody cuts classes at one time or another, so we'll overenroll by 25 per cent. If, by some wild chance, everybody should attend class one day, the floor is free and does not require a permit.

Athletic Events. Since the students probably were not allowed to bring a car back to school anyway, chances are they won't make it to the Civic Center. So we'll sell tickets for the student section as well as make them available to the alumni and general public. Any conflict between students and the public will be handled in the normal manner. (Who put the most dollars out for the old Blue and White?)

Residence Halls. Since, on any given night, some students are: at home; getting drunk; getting laid; all of the above. We will overbook the dorms by 33 per cent. The ultimate solution, the shuttle bus, will be employed to run between residence halls to help students in their search for a vacant bed. In event that all places are taken, anyone may camp in the Commonwealth Stadium free of charge. (This may cause some problems in December, January and February but, what the hell, college is one learning experience after another, right?)

Seriously folks, as near as I can figure we pay to go school here. Not the other way around. If we could catch up with the rest of the academic world and solve some of these petty problems, perhaps we could devote the time so badly needed to the real issues at hand today.

Column defies logic

Dick Downey has achieved the impossible. In one devastating display of literary genius (open letter to Ms. Gandhi, Sept. 9), he has shown discourteous disregard for the virtuous dictates of logic, facts, common knowledge and politics.

It is evident from the first paragraph of his article that he is miserably misinformed about the situation in India. I urge him to confine his quest for knowledge of the Indian situation to reliable sources of info (e.g. Wall Street Journal, April 27, '76) before making any statements.

It is indeed heartening to know of his much advertised concern for the reputation of women in high positions. But he will have to throw light on how he decided that a benevolent person like Ms. Gandhi will give women, here, a masculine reputation. I presume it was his brand of humor.

The elaborate analysis of hang gliding and the physio-psychological write up of the participants, though instructive, was not awe-inspiring.

Dick Downey operates from the right premise but, he has to substantiate his accusations with facts if his view is to be appreciated. We always regard views as free and facts as sacred but, Mr. Downey regards his views as sacred and facts as free.

He also goes to great lengths to discuss various assorted phenomena, which do not amount to much. This reveals that his perception of the irrelevant is phenomenal.

Lastly it is his credit that Mr. Downey valiantly upholds the sacred principles of freedom, non-violence and sexual equality. BRAVO.

Mucci's personal attack unfair

By STEVEN O. PETREY

David Mucci's commentary, "Executive Judgment," was both a shock and disappointment to me. I have always thought Mr. Mucci had class enough not to resort to personal attacks on those of opposing political ideology. Evidently I was wrong.

commentary

In addition, Mucci paints a misleading picture of Jim Harralson's action as Student Government (SG) President claiming that Harralson was both inept and abusive in the use of his presidential powers. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Stating that "Harralson and his fraternity brothers" railroaded resolutions through the General Student Assembly is absurd. Mr. Harralson is an alumni of Kappa Alpha. The fraternity that dominated the first GSA was Alpha Gamma Rho. The second GSA was not dominated by any one group. So how did Harralson "strong-arm" resolutions through the GSA?

It can be said that Harralson did resist some efforts of the Gay Student Coalition. However, he was extremely conscientious about giving due consideration to proposals concerning the coalition despite personal convictions that homosexuality is morally wrong. An example of this was his response to the request that SG sponsor a gay dance. He concluded that SG is not in the business of sponsoring dances — for any group.

Harralson's veto of funding for the Council on Women's Concerns was perfectly justifiable. The council asked for a sum of $300 without itemizing what the funds were needed for. Such explanation had been required of all other organizations requesting SG funds. The veto was eventually overridden, but not before a detailed explanation of what the funds were to be used for.

A claim that Harralson was responsible for the loss of $1,200 in SG funds is grossly unfair. Those funds were actually allocated to the Mucci administration and were not spent. For Harralson to have spent $1,200 haphazardly simply to insure that it was spent would be the height of fiscal irresponsibility.

Jim Harralson ran a SG administration to be respected and I, for one, will welcome the opportunity to read his views about this year's SG in the Kernel. I commend the Kernel on its choice of columnists.

'Make-work' programs will not create employment

I have just finished watching the evening news. For the third consecutive month, David Brinkley reports, the unemployment rate has risen. Jimmy Carter is talking about poor government leadership. President Ford and his economists are squirming. The jobless are cussing.

The answer many of our politicians are prescribing is some version of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill. When unemployment gets out of hand, they say, the government should simply create enough jobs to get the jobless rate back to an acceptable level. The theory sounds good, and it may elect a well-intentioned President and Congress, but it won't work (no pun intended).

Let's examine the situation more closely. In order to implement its "make-work" program, government will need money.

Levy additional taxes
If government takes more money from taxpayers, the taxpayers will consume less and will put less money into savings and investment institutions. Any increase in employment resulting from government "make-work" will be offset by the decrease in employment caused by smaller taxpayer consumption and the reduced ability of savings and investment institutions to lend money for projects that demand employment.

Spend less on other programs
You may regard this as an admirable objective, but it would not increase employment. The dollars used for "make-work" jobs would subtract dollars, and thus employment, from the other government programs.

Borrow the money
Government could issue savings bonds, treasury bills and long-term notes to finance "make-work." Again, however, the government would be diverting money from consumption and other uses—savings and private investment—and the employment increase resulting from "make-work" would be matched by the decrease in employment resulting from less consumption and savings-private investment.

Print the money
Wouldn't it be nice to have your own money printing press? Well, the government does, and they can crank it up whenever they want. Because government has injected new money into the economy, we have more money trying to buy the same amount of goods and services. This causes the prices of goods and services to rise, creating the situation we know as inflation.

Now follow closely. Inflation is just as much a tax as the explicit tax increase I mentioned in my first point, because it will decrease people's ability to consume, save and invest. They will have the same number of dollars, which will now be worth less in real terms because of higher prices, and hence cannot demand as much employment. The only difference between inflation and a tax increase is that the former is tougher to relate directly to government, though usually that is the correct relationship.

All in all, then, the government can no more create employment with "make-work" than Carter can grow Little Liver Pills. It can only take the demand for employment from people, who would dictate employment by expressing their preferences in the marketplace, and put the demand in the hands of some middle-level bureaucrats, who will dictate employment as they think best. This action, obviously, is both inefficient and undesirable.

What positive things can government do? Several things. It can reduce taxes to minimum rates, thus allowing people as much freedom as possible in spending their money; it can show restraint in its spending, ending its deficits, thereby relieving inflationary pressure; it can abolish or graduate minimum wage rates to the young and unskilled can obtain jobs; it can implement welfare reform (another topic in itself) which will provide work incentives and require able-bodied welfare recipients to earn their checks; and it can dissolve the regulatory monsters it has created, most, if not all of whom are controlled by the businesses they were designed to regulate.

Oh, if only the government would let the people do it. But then (where are you, Charlie Masters?), if only frogs had wings they wouldn't womp their tails every time they jumped.

Jim Harralson, first-year law student, was Student Government president last year. An economics graduate, Harralson will write a bi-weekly column.

Sen. Mondale says Democrats would revitalize Peace Corps

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Walter F. Mondale says that if he and Jimmy Carter are elected, they will move to revitalize the Peace Corps and restore it to something resembling what it was during the Kennedy administration.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate said Nixon administration officials "kind of beat the life out of" the Peace Corps, "partly because it had this idealistic tone to it that they found offensive."

But to him, Mondale said, "The Peace Corps represents a classic example of the dividends that flow from idealism," and carries with it a spiritual commitment that may be more important than what its projects actually accomplish.

In speeches during a five-day campaign swing Mondale repeatedly praised the Peace Corps and the spirit he says it engendered, but stopped short of promising that Carter would renew the program that was severely cut back when it was merged in 1971 with several other volunteer agencies into one program called Action.

During an interview aboard his chartered jet enroute back to Washington, Mondale was asked whether a Carter administration would restore the Peace Corps to the form in which it operated during the Kennedy years.

"Yes, I think so," he replied. "It's a symbol of the need for a more forthcoming attitude" on the part of public leaders.

At its peak in the mid-1960s, the corps had more than 15,000 volunteers in 48 countries and an annual budget of $114 million. Now it has 6,690 volunteers in 68 countries and its budget for fiscal 1977 is down to $67.1 million. The emphasis now is on persons with technical skills, rather than those with liberal arts background who dominated the Peace Corps in the early years.

Carter's 78-year-old mother, Mrs. Lillian Carter, was in the Peace Corps 11 years ago, serving in India.

American foreign policy has been a recurring theme of Mondale's campaign appearances and he said in the interview that the subject is to be included in his preparations for the as-yet-unscheduled debate with his Republican opponent, Sen. Bob Dole.

The Minnesota senator said he is happy with the tentative debate arrangements "because the emphasis is on learning and being ready, but not on style. I'm very comfortable with that."

Asked whether he expected the debate to be "feisty," Mondale said, "Not if I can establish the tone. I don't think the people like that. I think they want to know how our minds work, where we want to take this country."

Viking II looks for life on Mars

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—The Viking II robot lander began its search Sunday for chemical evidence of life on the planet Mars, reaching out for a sample of dirt for its miniaturized laboratories.

The little machine working as man's representative was to have made its first digging expedition on the rocky surface of the Plain of Utopia early Sunday.

But earthmen were not to get word of the dig's success or failure until early morning when a communications relay was scheduled, at 1:30 a.m. EDT Monday.

"I can't imagine anything screwing up," said Viking spokesman Nick Panagakos. Viking II's telescoping arm was to reach out, scoop up a handful of Martian soil and bring it back for three biology experiments aboard the lander.

Then on Monday, the shovel is to get an additional scoopful of dirt for the fourth miniature laboratory, the one that tests for the presence of organic materials. The experiment is expected to draw the focus of scientific and public attention, unlike during the Viking I ex-

Five Croatian nationalists face air piracy charges

PARIS (AP)—Four unarmed men and a woman who hijacked an American jetliner and took it on a 6,000-mile hopscotch journey to Paris were flown back to New York on Sunday to face air piracy charges after surrendering to a French ultimatum and releasing their 53 hostages.

The five were reported earlier to be armed with handguns and grenades and two were wired with what were thought to be explosives. But after their surrender, the explosives turned out to be modeling clay and French police and released hostages said the hijackers had no guns or other weapons.

The five Croatian nationalists had been given a choice by French officials of being shipped to Communist Yugoslavia or to the United States, where a New York City policeman was killed by a bomb planted in a locker in Grand Central Station with some propaganda statements asking independence from Yugoslavia for Croatia.

Most of the 46 passengers and seven crewmembers freed from the hijacked Trans World Airlines 727 also returned to the United States aboard regular TWA flights Sunday.

The hijackers, who commanded the 727 Friday night on a flight from New York to Chicago, said they had accomplished their aim—publicity for their cause—and one added, "We are proud of what we did."

Jericho Harp tickets on sale
'Songsmith' opens Coffee House

The SCB fall music calendar takes off this week as songsmith James Durst entertains in the Coffee House and tickets for Jericho Harp's Sept. 24 ballroom concert go on sale.

Jericho Harp will be in concert in the SC ballroom Sept. 24. Tickets go on sale today.

Durst performs in the SC Grille tonight through Wednesday from 8 to 10 p.m. Admission is free. Tickets for Jericho Harp may be purchased in SC room 203 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

James Durst says that he emerged from his mother's womb one morning in 1945 and sang his first notes. Taking the doctor's pat on the back as encouragement, he has been singing ever since.

What is a songsmith? According to Durst, he is a poet and a musician—the songwriter; a singer and a player—the performer; but, more than that he is, in essence, the very song itself.

Durst has been writing his own songs since 1965, and has performed in the far corners of Europe and the Middle East from Iceland to Beirut and toured Indonesia from Singapore to South Viet Nam.

Since coming home to America in 1974, Durst has been around the Chicago area, performing, writing, publishing, recording and directing creative projects in a variety of media.

formed in the Annual Woody Guthrie Concert for the Benefit of Huntington's Disease.

Durst has published several songbooks of his material and just to keep busy he created, produced, directed and hosted his own twice-weekly radio series that featured the traditional music of selected countries.

Like Durst, Jericho Harp write as well as perform. Jim Thomas and Tom Schmidt, after leaving defunct bands and looking for new possibilities, met in the 1971 at a party and have been playing together ever since as Jericho Harp.

Schooled in the folk and rock arenas, Thomas and Schmidt have woven their separate experiences into a style they define as undefinable. Performing mostly original music, in a strong, smooth delivery, between songs they also poke fun at anything that moves.

Having played over 300 concerts in more than half of states, from small colleges to major universities and drawn a number of return engagements.

UK crushes Beavers 38-13

After today's game I would have to say that Ramsey is one of the best quarterbacks in the SEC."

Curci said he wasn't concerned about UK's second-half letdown.

"We sort of lost concentration in the second-half, plus we went with our younger players, then. But generally I think we were a well executed team today, both offensively and defensively." Curci admitted the UK pass rush was weak.

"That was a big team, and with a team like that you have to break their containment.

"We didn't do it. Sometimes that quarterback (Kyle Grossart) would roll out 15-18 yards. But (defensive end Craig) Roberts was an especially good performer."

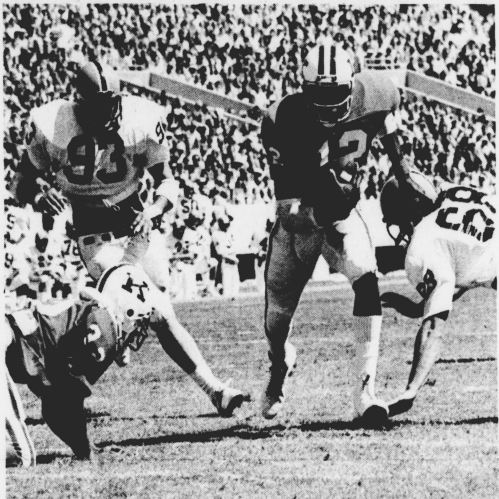

Roberts dumped Grossart

once, block a pass and had one fumble recovery.

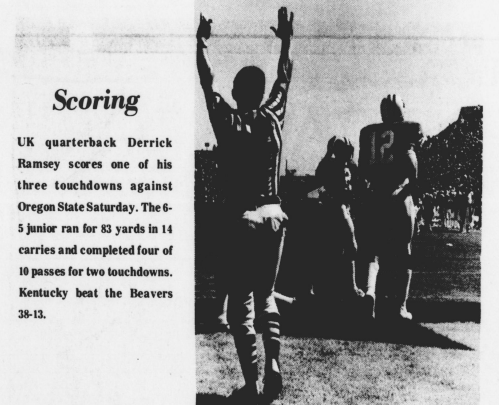

Despite the easy victory, Dickerson added a note of caution.

"They don't get optimistic. Last year we blew out VPI (27-8) and you know what happened after that. We're going to take these games one by one. We can't afford to be overconfident," he said.

Scoring

UK quarterback Derrick Ramsey scores one of his three touchdowns against Oregon State Saturday. The 6-5 junior ran for 83 yards in 14 carries and completed four of 10 passes for two touchdowns. Kentucky beat the Beavers 38-13.

then did little to prepare him for life as a center.

"The only time I touched the ball before I started here was on a fumble or something," he said.

Which brings up another interesting question: How did a player of Hopewell's caliber escape the grasp of famed Alabama coach Paul "Bear" Bryant?

"Yeah, Alabama recruited me out of high school but I never saw Bryant, only his assistants," he said.

"My mom and dad are from up around here and UK has a good agricultural school. That's mostly the reason I came here."

Hopewell earned many honors in high school including some in track and field.

Hopewell isn't the only newcomer to the offensive line at UK. Art Still, who normally plays defensive end was in for several plays as a tight end on goal line offense.

He lines up next to Warren Bryant which probably strikes terror into the hearts of opposing defensive players.

Still thinks that his experience on defense helps him on the offensive line.

"I can tell what their end is going to do," he said. "I can usually tell what kind of move he's going to try and make on me."

Fran Curci credited the offensive line play for much of the Cats success Saturday.

"They were really blowing them off of the line," Curci said. "The holes were there for the backs."

Bryant summed up the feelings of the linemen by saying simply, "We showed them what we can do when we try."

Police use dogs to disperse Aylesford party

Green, who described the arm wound as "a mild puncture," refused medical treatment.

Witnesses said police, carrying billy clubs, and the canine units began moving the crowd southward on Aylesford Place toward Euclid at about 11:15 p.m.

Kernel photographer Charles Spinelli, architecture junior, said he was arrested while shooting pictures for the newspaper. According to Spinelli, he identified himself as a member of the press and was cleared by Glindmeyer to take photographs.

"I told him (Spinelli) to stay on the north end of Aylesford Place—away from the crowd," Glindmeyer said. "The next thing I know, they're (police) bringing him from the middle of the crowd—he didn't obey."

Spinelli, however, said he stayed "at least 20 feet behind the crowd" after receiving clearance from Glindmeyer. "I was moving behind the crowd when I was grabbed by the cops."

"They took me to a paddy wagon—I held up my press card and told them I was with the press, but they told me to shut up," Spinelli was charged with disorderly conduct.

Wilbur Pate, 20, engineering junior, also was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct. Pate said he saw Spinelli taking his picture as Pate was arrested. "He was back from us, a good 10 or 15 feet from me and I wasn't even in the crowd," Pate said. He added that he entered Aylesford Place 15 minutes before being arrested.

William Thomas Duffy, business and economics freshman, also was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

"I was leaving and signalling to some people across the street to come with me when they arrested me. He (the policeman) was just trying to do his job—things were getting out of hand."

Donald Leach, 22, sociology junior, was another student arrested and charged with disorderly conduct. "I couldn't believe it (the police action). There was no fighting and it was only 11:30," he said.

Leach added that "the treatment was real fine once we got to the detention center" (on Forbes Road).

The following students, who were also arrested and charged by Metro Police were unavailable for or refused comment: Stanley C. Hausman, 24, business administration junior, disorderly conduct; Peter Wilson Craig, arts and sciences sophomore, public intoxication.

C. H. Sledd, 74, who lives next door to the apartment building where the party reportedly originated, said "The students were just standing around—weren't making much noise. I didn't know what they were doing."

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Lee, 350 Aylesford Place, said the crowd was very noisy. However, the Lees said they doubted that 37 of their neighbors would have complained to police.

Glindmeyer said the arrests were a result of the crowd "putting us in the middle by not dispersing."

Leach, one of the arrested students, said "UK won the big game that day. You'd think they'd be a little more lenient."

It was the first time canine units were used for the purposes of dispersing a crowd in Lexington, Glindmeyer said.

He is scheduled to arrive at Lexington Bluegrass Airport at noon. Carter will attend a reception at Democratic Headquarters for volunteer workers and will hold a press conference at 1 p.m.

Carter is also scheduled to attend a private college press conference sponsored by the Kernel in the Journalism Building at 3:30 p.m. Carter and his wife Annett will visit Fayette Mall after the press conference.
