

Henry

The necessity of hard study to acquire a good education

It is one of the most important things that man has to do to acquire a good education there have the most numerous advantages flowing from it the farmer who has a good education can then understand how to estimate the soil and what it will best produce and how to dispose of it the best.

The merchant can tell what kind of goods he can best trade with whom to take them and how to dispose of them. The Philosopher can by hard study trace the heavenly bodies in their courses around the sun the time it takes these to perform their circuits round the sun these are how many satellites they carry around the sun the distance from the sun how far from each other the number of these how many comets these are the time they take to complete their trips around the sun when they will appear to us their swiftness with which they travel when they are nearest the sun and when they are furthest from the sun how near they pass by the planets. The lawyer has to study hard to get a knowledge of the law the doctor has the same. Those who have a good education can know what is going on in other countries what they are doing this sheet

W. J. Drum