

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The University of Kentucky is pleased to welcome you to this center of learning. We feel that we are providing for you a fine environment in which you may carry forward your education. The real effort, however, must come from you—the learner.

You are now the most important part of a great University. It is our sincere hope that you will strive on every occasion to represent your University in the finest way possible.

President Eliot of Harvard once said in addressing the students there: "In backward ages universities kept alive philosophy, and in progressive ages they lead the forward movement. . . . They bring a portion of every successive generation to the confines of knowledge, to the very edge of territory already conquered, and say . . . 'Thus far came our fathers. Now press you on!'"

We hope that your experiences here will be ones which will contribute to a richer and fuller life for you and a finer and higher type of living for our future generations. It is our responsibility to "press on" for the highest possible achievements in education.

FRANK G. DICKEY