Tuition increase fair, Hill says

By MICHAEL L. JONES Editorial Editor

James Hill, the of the Council on Higher Education, said that students at Kentucky's eight public universities and 14 community colleges should use the 18.5 percent tuition increase approved by the CHE to their advantage.

CHE to their advantage. "Students should be proud of that advantage. "Students should be proud of that 28 million," said Hill, a UK third-year law student. "They can go to legislators and say. We've paid our share, now it's your turn." Hill told the UK Student Government Association Senate last night that it is imperative that students lobby state lawmakers on behalf of hisher education.

The first phase of construction on a $22 million, 100-acre arbore-tum sponsored by UK and the Lex-ington-Fayette Urban County Gov-ernment will begin shortly following UK's last home football game, Nov. 25.

The University accepted a $312,300 bid from the E.C. Mat-thews Co., a local contractor, over three other bidders.

The University estimated that the job would cost $337,000, according to UK Vice Chancellor for Administration Jack Blanton.

The University has a 50-year lease agreement from the Lexing-ton-Fayette Urban County government, who is financing the first phase with a $500,000 grant.

Hill said that students were fortunate that the university presidents did not press the council to abandon the formula and increase tuition by a greater amount.
"They were definitely going to do it," Hill said. "When someone has a 15-page proposal written, you can take your money to the bank."
Hill criticized University of Louisville President Donald Swain and CHE Chairman Mike Harreld for supporting an even higher tuition increase.
"Millionaire bankers and university presidents who live in mansions don't understand the economic effects of a tuition increase," he said.

Hill said that he expects another utilion increase of about 18.5 percent in the 1993-94 biennium, but only if the state puts more money into higher education.

CONFRONTING A PROBLEM

Eating disorders common among college students

By CYNTHIA LEWIS

Eating disorders may not be a hot topic with many students, but UK health experts say it is a serious problem among many female ous problem among many female students.

The two most common eating disorders are anorexia nervosa and bilimia nervosa.

Anorexia nervosa is caused when a person tries to lose a lot of weight in a very short amount of time. Bullmia nervosa is caused by binge eating, which causes people to lose control of their eating behaviors.

Susan West, assistant dean of students and adviser to the Panhellenic Council, said eating disorders are a problem among many women in sororities.

"Last year at least five chapters" orders are a problem among many women in sororities.

"Last year at least five chapters implemented programs concerning eating disorders," West said.
"Sororities at the national level have recognized eating disorders as a necessary problem to address within their memberships and have created programs for them to use."

Eating disorders can be treated with medical care and counseling, but health experts say that recog-nizing that someone has an eating disorder is half he battle.

"In the case of eating problems, education makes a big difference," asid Lisa Stofer, health education coordinator. "Otherwise, it might go totally undetected."

"People often feel hopeless about eating disorders, "said Janet Coffey, a psychologist in UK's Counseling and Testing Centre."But the fact is that most people with eating disorders respond well to treatment and go on to lead normal lives."

At a workshop held this fall, sorority house mothers were told how to recognize eating disorders and how to recognize eating disorders and how to deal with them, West said.

Stephanie Lowe, a graduate student in Clinical Nutrition from Felicity, Ohio, was a senior in high school when she began to starve herself.

"I was running track at the state level, and I decided to take off a few pounds," she said.
At 5 feet-7 inches, Stephanic weighed around II fo pounds, which is under the average weight for that height. Stephanic said she lost about five pounds, then five more, then five more, until she weighed 88 pounds, "It came off fast."

Stephanie consumed only about 150 calories a day for six weeks. "If I ate over 200 calories, that was too much!"
In addition, Stephanie was sleeping only two or three hours a day.

day.

Janet Coffey, a psychologist in UK's Counseling and Testing Center, said that reduced sleep is a common reaction to starvation. Each morning Stephanie would go running, stelling her parents that she didn't have time for breakfast. During her lunch break at school, she would take a walk instead of eating. After school, she ran track.

Stephanie said that she had convinced herself that she didn't need food to run track. "I guess I was running more on emotions than tood to the cost.

Tunning more on emotions than anything else."

Dimer was Stephanie's hardest meal to avoid because she ate with her parents.

To avoid eating, she would either ut the frood into small pieces, so that it appeared that she was eating, or she would slip the food into a napkin, wad it up and throw it away or feed her collie when her parents weren't looking. Stephanie said her friends began to be concerned about her health.

'I didn't listen to anybody. They kept saying 'You're too thin,' But to me, them telling me I was getting too thin was a compliment. I wrote it all off as jealousy."

Finally the persistence of one of her friends convinced her to see a doctor. "I went just to get her off my back."
But the doctor didn't know what to do about Stephanie's weight loss. "He pretty much slapped me on my wrist and sent me on my way.
Stephanie got back up to 112 pounds the summer before she entered college.
But when she came to UK in the fall she didn't know anyone

CAE calls on prospective UK students

By KIMBERLY BUNTON Contributing Writer

The Collegians for Academic Excellence Phone-a-thon is proof that personal contact can have a big influence on a high school senior's decision to attend college, according to Paulette Sides, CAE chairman.

When CAE began the phone-a-thon about five years ago, Sides said some people were skeptical over whether it would help recruit students.

"Some people had doubts our first year," Sides said. "But we proved them wrong... One year I called a gif from Hawaii and she liked me so much she called me back twice. Now she's a student here at UK."

This week, CAE members have been calling prospective UK students and telling them about what it is like to attend college in Lexington. About 500 high school seniors had been reached through

Louisville investigating complaint of racism

Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The University of Louisville says it will investigate a freshman's complaint that she has been a target of racial harassment since classes began in September.

The allegation made by Dawne Jones prompted about 200 students, most of them black, to gather Monday night on campus and march

Some students said the gathering was a quest for information but others characterized it as a demonstration. Several students who live in the university's Fratternity Row, which includes the dormitory, said the meeting was noisy and included taunts between black and white students.

UK signs 2, but Morton opts for UL

Rick Pitino signed his first two players as UK coach yesterday, but two other players he had hoped would play for the Wildcast signed on the dotted line elsewhere. Worst of all for Pitino, though, was that state rival the University of Louisville won the battle for ore of the nation's best players. Dwayne Morton, a 6-6 forward from Louisville Central High School, signed a national letter of intent yesterday morning to attend U of L.

U of L.

Morton is rated by many as one of the top five high school seniors in the country.

"We were in an old recruiting battle with Louisville and we lost." Pittino said last night at a news conference. ".. We wish Dwayne Morton the best of luck at Louisville... He is really an outstanding young man. He's one of the niest recruit with the control of the control life."

Pitino said that he and his staff had thought for the last couple of weeks that Morton was coming to UK. "We really thought Morton was coming to Kentucky from his visit (until today)."

But what disappointed Pitino the most is the way he found out about Morton's decision — the radio. Pitino said he heard about Morton's decision at 11:10 a.m., yesterday.

"No question. ... It was disappointing that we found out on the radio," said Pitino, who received a call from Morton's high school coach, Ralph Johnson, at 12:30 yesterday aftermoon to tell him of Morton's decision. "But sometimes a 17-year-old doesn't really think things through."

Morton's mother, Charlotte, said that she wanted her son to attend U of L where she could watch him play his home games in person, instead of on television. But Morton Pitino's coaching style.

"Well, obviously, his mother's opinion carries a lot of weight," Pitino said. "But his mother can't shoot baskethalls, so that's why we kept (recruiting him)."

Louisville television station WLKY-32 reported Tuesday that Morton, his mother and Johnson met with U of L coach Denny Crum Monday night, which is a violation of NCAA rules.

But Pitino said he thought that the report was inaccurate.
"I just don't think Louisville would do that," he said. "I mean, that is a blatant violation of NCAA rules."

And Morton's late decision cost UK the opportunity to sign another recruit.

Stephen Davis, a 6-6 forward from Corinth, Miss., verbally committed to the University of Mississippi yesterday.

When Pitino was asked if head any doubts that if Morton had announced his plans earlier that Davis would have decided on UK, he bold-ly said, "None."

"Enough is enough. I don't blame him for not coming to the University of Kentucky," Pitino said. "We called (Davis) this after-noon to congratulate him on his decision to attend Mississippi and wished him the best of luck."
And even though Pitino said he would not try to change Davis' mind at this point, he would not turn him away if he did change his mind.

turn in away it ne the triange ms mind.

"We feel like that if he wanted to come, then we'd feel excited to have him," he said.

Pitino signed his first UK recruit yesterday when 6-4, 190-pound guard Carlos Toomer, a high school teammate of Davis, signed a national letter of intent.

"Carlos Toomer is a major, big-time point guard in my system," Pitino said. "He keeps moving all of the time. He's goes by people and keeps running.
"We actually saw him first at his (high school) practice. And when I saw him, I told my assistants that he was the point guard I wanted." Pitino said he was not concerned that recruiting gurus don't think that Toomer, a high school forward, could not play point guard at the college level.
"You've got to evaluate a player and in your system," he UK coach said. "There's no doubt that (Toomer) can play point guard. He's everything we want in a point guard — quickness and athletic ability. Plus, he's 6-4."

Toomer was also being heavily recruited by Memphis State and Ole Miss.

Also signing a national letter of intent last night was Jamal Mashburn, a 6-8, 220-pound forward from Brons, N.Y.
"Jamal Mashburn is one of the season was also were pleavily recruited heaves "Westen also been feel with the season with a 28-game winning streak.

"Jamal Mashburn is one of the more versatile players I've seen at the high school level in some time," Pitino said in a news release. "He goes away from the basket, dribbles well with both hands and scores well inside and out. He lent but emotions ran high, said Tara Wigginton, president of the university's Student Government Association.

Hill said that having more colege-ductated citizens could only help Kentucky economically.

Jones, an 18-year-old psychology major from Dayton, Ohio, is the only black student living in the Panhellenic dormitory, previously reserved for pledges seeking full membership in U of 1 sororities.

Although Jones does not belong to a sorority, she was assigned to the dormitory because spaces in other buildings available for freshmen were filled, said university spokeswoman Denise Fizppatrick.

Jones said the harassment has taken three forms: Slipping anonymous notes beneath the door of her room, using racial surs and urging her to movo out of the building.

Someone vandalized a message pad attached to the door of her room, and a young man who she believed to be a member of u Of L fraternity insulted her, she said.

"I' was called a nigger and told a U of L fraternty insulted her, she said.

"I was called a nigger and told I don't belong and that I don't live in the building," Jones said.
"I do live in the building, I pay my money to go to school like everyone else, and I don't feel that I should have to be discriminated against."
Jones filed a formal complaint Tuesday with the university's student-life division against was the student who insulted her, a standard procedure that could lead to suspension from school, said Ralph Fitzpatrick, the universi-ty's top minority affairs officer.

Federal law forbids the univer-sity to disclose details of the complaint or the identity of the accused student.

Jones said she has experienced no discrimination in class or elsewhere on campus and re-mains pleased with the universi-ty. But she and others said there are some signs of racial tension fizzpatrick acknowledged that racism seems to have increased during the 1980s, around the United States and at U of L, as a new generation of students too young to remember the civilrights struggles of the 1960s arrives on campus.

Curtis Warfield, academic vice president of the student govern-ment and who is black, said, "I think the (racial) situation here is very good, but there is much room for improvement."

Gerald White, a black student who is president of the U of L chapter of the NAACP, called campus race relations "tense, to say the least."

"Our biggest problem now is that the students are angry about Dawne Jones ... and they should be angry," White said.

But White, too, said he favors working within the system and letting the university's investi-gation run its course.

Students are a key to lobbying for higher education

Tuesday the Council on Higher Education approved an average tuition increase of 18.5 percent for the 1990-92 biennium. UK students face a 16.7 increase — an 8.7 percent hike during the 1990-91 academic year and an 8 percent increase during the 1991-92 school year.

In layman's terms, it means that UK students will have to pay about $40 more a semester.

The increase approved by the CHE is one of the biggest that has been passed in the last 20 years. Although the increase may cause some students to count their nickles and ditnes a little more carefully, $40 more a semester to attend UK is a good deal, especially when you consider how much students in other states pay to attend state universities and colleges.

states pay to attend state universities and colleges.

The formula to set tuition at Kentucky's eight universities and 14 community colleges is based on what students at benchmark schools pay andthe Kentuckian's ability to pay.

Some student leaders have acted unfavorably to the tuition hike, saying that it will cause some students who will not be able to afford the increase to drop out of college.

Any increase ultimately will affect a few students on the scale, but the overall impact it will have increasing the number of college drop-outs should be minimal.

The formula has been regarded as a fair way to determine the price people have to pay for higher education in Kentucky, and it should not be changed until the General Assembly acts in the

with an 18.5 percent increase, students now can go to lawmakers and the governor and demand that they do their part to fund higher education at 100 percent. If students do their part to pay for higher education, then there is no excuse why the state's leaders should shirk their responsibilities to the

But if students do not get involved in the next session of the General Assembly and lobby state leaders on behalf of higher education, it is unlikely that universities will see very much money from the state.

Students need to contact their state representatives and enators and let them know how they feel about the future of igher education in Kentucky.

They need to make it clear to their lawmakers that higher education is an important part of the state's future, and unless it receives the proper attention in the next session, all of the effort put in to reforming primary and secondary education wil be a waste of the state's money.

Name signifies pride in culture and race

In response to the letter "New name won't redefine a culture," I am glad to have been shown this piece since it is synonymous with what I see on a daily basis, where a society has become so washed in indifference that arrogance and true ignorance is running amok.

To take it to another level, allow me to ask that Mr. Ekambaram merely concentrate on his own words rather than new words con-

words rather than new words con merely concentrate on his own words rather than new words constructed by me.

Perhaps the Rev. Jesse Jackson's quote is not convincing to Mr.

Ekambaram, but I assure you there are plenty of us who should be since it is neither illogical or impractical to embrace the fact that people, human beings need a sense of connection to the universe—their own place in the universe.

It is an innate fact of human nature and why inevitably most adopted children at some point desire to know their original connection through it may not be — in the long run — a continued one.

And when reality washes up the fact that virtually all cultural ties were broken in the transition of Africans to the United States, the "blacks" — African-Americans, virtually transformed into an undefined resource, I am quite easily convinced that we have a problem. We resource, I am quite easily con-vinced that we have a problem. We need to root, to nothing short of vinced that we have a processor need to root, to nothing short of ourselves.

Also in his analogy, he refers to "Indian" culture, Personally, I don't feel qualified to debate over the feelings and temperature of a culture that I do not know and am not a part of, so I will simply say that in order for this analogy to be valid, the label of American Indians would need to be red or some appropriate label of coloration in order to be compared to black and white.

The most disturbing fact about Ekambaram's piece, however, had to do with his assumption that the decision to change the name of the black culture had anything to do with any outside entity.

On the contrary, it originates with the realization that it is time to dispel this habit altogether. In order for the black culture to grow, and grow healthly, many blacks realize that the cleansing must begin and end from within.

OPINION

The preoccupation with outside cultures must become more relaxed in order for that to happen. I cannot provide solutions to problems in my home if I am attempting to base those solutions on conditions

We are living in a time when v We are living in a time when we can no longer accept anything short of the fact that true change must begin at home and the focus must be on the elements, the weaknesses there. We are living at a time when we can no longer accept the fact that true change must begin at home, and the focus must be on the elements, the weaknesses there. The only person who seems to be suggesting that this cleansing will end with a name change is Ekambaram. I have heard that idea conveyed by no black that I know.

like the needs of others since our history is unique in itself.

Ekambaram poses the question whether African-American is instantaneously credible merely because it is a name from within. And if it is superior to any name given by outsiders.

Mr. Ekambaram has greatly missed the point. And if it is difficult for him to understand how seriously off he is, please allow me to name his next child and stick to the mame I chose, no matter what. I'm game. Is he?

Higher education needs students' support

Shame

UK, as I said back in September, will be facing a 16.7 percent tui-tion increase — an 8.7 percent in-crease for the 1990-91 school year and an 8 percent increase for the 1991-92 school year and ear 8 percent increase for the 1991-92 school year. crease.)

I think that the primary problem that students have when looking at the numbers is that they just don't understand the history behind the way tuttion is set in the state.

"Biennium" means for a period of two years. Therefore, when the Council on Higher Education sets tuttion for the next biennium, they are setting tuttion for the next two years.

The reason they do this is because the Kentucky legislature cause the Kentucky legislature meets every other year and herefore they can only approve the council's recommendations every other year.

Also, when the CHE sets an increase for tuition, they spell out how the increase will be broken down over the two year period.

The Council on Higher Education, as stated above, is deemed the exponsibility by the state legisla-the University of Cincinnati, Indiana University, Purdue University, etc.) charge to attend school. Allthough our per capita income although our per capita income al-lows us to pay below-average tui-tion, history shows that increases are not very rare are not very rare.

For example, in the 1982-84 biennium, we experienced a 30 percent increase and in the 1986-88 biennium, we experienced a 14 percent increase. In other years, however, we experienced a smaller increase, such as the 6.5 percent increase of the 1988-90 biennium.

Fortunately or not, the average.

Fortunately or not, the average person in Kentucky is making more money now than in the past. Also, the universities around us ve raised their tuition (Note: Of the 25 institutions that Kentucky uses to set its tuition, all but three charge their students more money than Kentucky.) Therefore, both parts of the formula are effect-ed and tuition is increased.

Why did students settle for this? Earlier this year, we had informa-tion which indicated that leaders in tion which indicated that leaders in higher education supported utition increases of up to 36 percent over what we pay now.

Jim Hill, the student member of the Council on Higher Education, and I announced that we would fight any increase above the already set formula. (Many legislators even said that they would take tuition-setting out of the hands of CHE if they did not follow the guidelines set by the existing formula.)

set by the existing formula.) The CHE then agreed that they would stick to the tuition-setting formula for this biennium, which called for a much lower increase than the numbers that had been tossed around. Students won this battle. The fact is, that we, as students, could have asked that the Council not follow the formula in hopes that tuition would not have been increased as much. However, in all actuality, the CHE most likely would have taken advantage of the situation and raised tuition as much as possible.

(There are students in Kentucky do not pay enough to attend a uni-versity in this state, and would be more than willing to vote for an inse of tuition.)

Please understand that we, the students at UK, are lucky not to be facing greater increase than we are. The tuition for regional universities clear.

I have said over and over that I, along with UK students, will not stand for a substantial tuition increase—an increase above the one already set by the tuition formula. I still believe this and would fight such a proposal as I did before.

The formula has offered students a sense of safety from those who such a proposal as I did before. The formula has offered students a sense of safety from those who wish to increase tuition a great deal. It has provided students a good way to know what they will need to pay for the next year, as well as for years to come. We must realize now that tuition is set for the next two years and use it to our advantage. We must let our state officials know that we, the students, have invested $29 million more towards our education—now it's their turn.

Our SGA Lobby Effort is in full gear lobbying the governor and the legislature in the interest of higher education—but they are accustomed to hearing from us.

They need to hear from you. Students across the state need to write their legislaturs and let them know that we will be paying an average of 18.5 percent more to attend school in Kentucky and that the legislature needs to make an investment in higher education as well. legislature needs to make an invest-ment in higher education as well.

are only 86 parish priests for 116 churches.

In 15 years the diocese will have only about 21 parish priests, or one for every 5,000 parishioners, according to a recent study.

A nationwide drop in the number of priests means that lay people are serving a greater role in the ritual of the Catholic liturgy.

That is where people like Kaalberg, 43, come in. She led the prayers at a wake on a recent night and assisted the priest in the funeral mass the next day.

Kaalberg was commissioned Oct.

1 as the first parish life coordinator in the Davenport Diocese.

She lightens the workload of the Rev. Richard Beyer, pastor of three area churches, and she also serves as business manager for three other parishes.

Her duties as parish life coordina-tor include helping with general and financial administration, prepara-tion sessions for baptisms, liturgy planning, work with other churches on ecumenical programs, religious education and the church bulletin.

She said that her job also in-cludes "listening to people and meeting the needs in the absence of the priest."

"It is a chance to be a tremendous help by freeing Beyer for what he needs to do and is trained to do. As a team we can really be a positive influence," she said.

'Blurry' makes Louisville-based band's future clearer

By CHARLES McCUE

Ten dollars is not that much money, but a $10 T-shirt is a big reason for the enormous success of Hopscotch Army.

Danny Flanigan, the band's guitarist and songwriter, said that a friend of the band was at The Cure concert in New York City wearing a Hopscotch Army T-shirt.

The T-shirt caught the eye of Mark Glasser, an organizer for the College Media Journal's New Music Seminar.

Glasser asked the girl wearing the sic Seminar.

Glasser asked the girl wearing the shirt to have Hopscotch Army send him a tape of their music.
Hopscotch Army sent the tape to Glasser and that led to a stint at the seminar and a song on the CMI's sampler disc.
"Glasser liked the tape, and CMJ picked a song for the their tape. It was a matter of being in the right place at the right time," Flanigan said.

While the band discovered that New York City is not their favorite place to play, they made a lot of contacts in the music industry.

"It was the first time we played in New York. It was totally different than playing in Louisville, lives too competitive," Flanigan said. "We were nothing but small fish in the ocean, but at least we were in the ocean."

The tape that was sent to the

The tape that was sent to the CMJ was Blurry, Hopscotch Army's first full-length cassette. Army's first full-length cassette. The cassette took about six months to record because the band was able to record only on Sundays.

"This band is our job so we could only record on Sundays because of our performance schedule," Flanigan said. "Then it took another two months to mix it. It ended up taking about 12 hours per song to mix."

The cassette reflects the band's unique alternative sound that is reminiscent of INXS or early Cure. "We named the cassette Blurry because we feel we are still unfocused about our musical direction. We haven't been writing together long enough yet." Flanigan said. "We accomplished what we set out to do. We had to finance everything ourselves. But we figured we could override fancy equipment with lots of time."

overniee taincy equipment with itos of time."

Hopscotch Army has not been signed to a major label, but the band hopes that will be only a mater of time.

The sales from Blurry have been brisk, with much support from the band's hometown, Louisville, Ky.

"The band is going the pretty standard pathway to getting signed. We're just now into that part of it. If you can sell in a region, show them that you have support in a particular area, that's what matters," Flanigan said.

particular area, that's what mat-ters," Flanigan said.

The band, which has a phenom-enal regional following, started out as Nouvo, doing mostly Top 40 covers. But they quickly decided that Top 40 was not the road they that Top 40 was not the road they wanted to travel.

"When we were Nouvo, a lot of pop music we were playing was trash, we just weren't into it. Top 40 is a lot of Debbie Gibson and Tiffany. It's bad, substance-wise and lyrically. It's not from the heart or the brains—it's from the pocketbook, to the record companies, the more money the better," Flanigan said.

Flanigan said he believes that someone who is out only to make money shouldn't get into alternative music.

"If a Top 40 band and an alternative band were competing for jobs, the Top 40 band would a lot more jobs faster," he said.

With the radio success of bands such as U2, The Cure and R.E.M., alternative music is becoming more accepted into the mainstream. But some fans have said that some of the bands have sold out in exchange for success.

But Flanigan disagrees. "They for success.

But Flanigan disagrees. "They never sold out, people just got more into it." he said "Antists like Suzanne Vega and Sting don't want to sound like one thing. The Cure is in the pop/rock section now. But they've always written pop songar. Now they 're more accepted. Alternative music as we see it won't be alternative in five years."

Flanigan and keyboardist Mark Richter write the lyrics for the band with the other members, bassist Scott Darrow and drummer David Hoback, bringing in the additional music and lyrics.

"With my songwriting, I would like to appeal to as many people as I can but not sacrifice my integrity. What matters is that I wrote a good song," Flanigan said. "I feel there is nothing wrong with lowe songs as long as you mean it." I get all of our songs from people. Like the song, "Anna," was inspired by Michael Hutchence's girl-friend in the movie "Dogs In Space." It's an anti-drug some inanimate thing to support you, that constitutes a weakness." But Flanigan disagrees. "They Hopscotch Army played the College Media Journal Convention in New York in October. Some of the other bands who performed included the Sugarcubes, PlL, New Order, and The Damned.
