Women receive life jail terms

Brown, Turpin not eligible to be paroled for 25 years

By SCOTT WARD
Managing Editor

A Fayette County jury yesterday recommended life in prison with no chance of parole for 25 years for Elizabeth Turpin and Karen Brown.

The two were convicted of murder Thursday night in the stabbing death of UK graduate Michael Turpin, Elizabeth's husband.

"It doesn't seem quite fair or that justice has been done," said Brown's attorney, Julius Rather, after the recommendation was announced at 4:05 p.m. yesterday.

"It seems to the family of Karen Brown, the standards of the community have been exceeded," he said in an impromptu press conference after the trial. Rather pointed out that it was Keith Bouchard who did the actual killing.

Bouchard pleaded guilty to murder and received a term of life in prison in exchange for his testimony against Brown, 22, and Turpin, 20.

Bouchard will be eligible for parole in eight years.

Commonwealth's Attorney Raymond Larson, who prosecuted the case, said that without Bouchard's testimony, "Elizabeth Turpin would have walked out of here with all that money," referring to $60,000 in life insurance policies on her husband.

Rather said he and Brown were surprised by the verdict. "I don't think with the evidence presented we expected either the death penalty or the verdict we got."

Turpin's attorney, Rick Rose, declined comment about the jury's recommendation.

A visibly shaken Don Turpin, Michael's father, said, "It's not what we expected... we'll live with it. I think she'll suffer more this way." When asked to whom he was referring, Turpin responded "both of them."

Larson said the jury's decision was a "very significant verdict," considering that it is the "next worst punishment" allowed under Kentucky law.

"Clearly, I think the death penalty would have been appropriate," he said. But Larson said he is "a great believer in the jury system. They obviously thought this was a real serious case because they gave a real serious sentence."

On his way out of the hallway outside the courtroom, Larson turned and said, "The whole thing is kind of hollow, you know, because we still have Michael Turpin dead."

"Karen Brown has a mother, too..." Rather said later, "her pain is no less real."

When Brown's recommendation was read, she quietly cried. Turpin showed little emotion, appearing to be in shock, when Judge Armand Angelucci read her sentence.

The jury's recommendation, which came after 10 hours of deliberation, is reported on page 7.

Organization to bring four speakers to Lexington area during school year

By DAN HASSERT
Staff Writer

A former NFL all-star and a controversial best-selling author and priest are among those featured in the UK Newman Center's 1986-87 Distinguished Speakers Program.

The Rev. Andrew Greeley, whose best sellers have created controversy within the Catholic Church, will lead off the series of four speakers with a lecture on Oct. 14. Tim Foley, the former Academic All-American at Purdue and Miami Dolphin for 12 years, will speak on Feb. 17.

Many church leaders and traditional Catholics have been upset by the sexual content of Greeley's novels and by his ideas about sexual conduct.

Greeley has written seven best-selling novels, including his recent autobiography, Confessions of a Parish Priest. He has also written more than 80 non-fiction books and more than 100 scholarly works. He also teaches sociology at the University of Arizona.

"We think Greeley is one of the best-known priests in the United States," said the Rev. Dan Noll, pastor of the UK Newman Center.

"We are blessed to be able to provide speakers of this caliber," he said.

The Rev. Bruce Ritter will speak on Nov. 17. Ritter is a Franciscan priest who founded the Covenant House, an international child care center with programs in New York, Guatemala, Toronto and Houston. These centers provide 24-hour emergency help, health and legal services, counseling and education to more than 20,000 homeless and runaway youth each year.

Foley, the former Miami Dolphin who played in three Super Bowls and one Pro-Bowl, will speak about his work as leader of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Foley was

Royal candidates model clothes for fall, winter in annual fashion show

By EVELYN B. LESTER

Amid applause and catcalls, homecoming candidates modeled in the 11th annual Homecoming Fashion Show last night.

About 200 people turned out for the show, which was held in the Student Center ballroom. It was sponsored by the Student Activities Board homecoming committee and featured the 16 semifinalists for homecoming queen in this season's styles.

Clothes for the show were provided by local fashion merchants, such as Embury's, Casual Corner and Bite of the Apple.

Barbara Bailey, Channel 27 news anchor, was the mistress of ceremonies. She introduced the candidates, who were escorted by prominent sports personalities, such as former UK basketball players Jim Master, Jack Givens and Dickie Beal.

The women received resounding support from friends, dormmates and members of the organizations that nominated them.

Ethan Davis, an engineering junior, showed up to cheer on Jill Marcum, his fraternity's nominee. About 30 other members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon came with him.

"It's always a big deal to have your candidate in the competition," Davis said. "We try to pick someone really good."

Lauren Sturtevant, an accounting sophomore, was at the show to support two of her sorority sisters, Mindy Martin and Molly Schrand.

"When you nominate someone, it's not just because of their looks," Sturtevant said. "You pick someone who will represent you through their activities, grades and their personality."

Chi Omega has three of its members in the semifinals. Jill McLoney, an advertising junior and Chi-O member, said voting would be easy. "You get to vote for three candidates, so we're all voting for the three of them."

Today is the last day for voting for the homecoming queen finalists. The five finalists will be announced Thursday night at the Wildcat Roar.

Astronomy professor lectures on space exploration

By LYN CONGLETON
Senior Staff Writer

Space exploration may be used to discover more about our own planet, said astronomer Bradford A. Smith before a crowd of about 200 in Worsham Theater last night.

Smith, the team leader of the Voyager Imaging Experiment, said that "learning more about another system helps us to understand our own system better."

Throughout his lecture and slide show, Smith cited examples to make his point. He used information and photos gained from the Voyager expedition.

"The real motivation is to learn who we are and how we came to be on this little planet," he said.

Smith pointed out that studies of Halley's comet may be a possible clue to the origin of life on Earth.

"Halley's comet is extremely dark," he said, and the "best guess

"In my mind there is no doubt that man will some day colonize, and that sooner or later we will meet someone else from another place trying to do the same thing."

Bradford A. Smith,

is that dust off (the) nucleus is carbon rich (the) very kind of material you would need to start life."

"The probability is high that the Earth was bombarded by comets, he said, and that the obvious thing to do now is study a comet.

Another similarity to Earth that lies in the solar system is that Saturn's moon, Titan, has an atmosphere similar to the early atmosphere of Earth, consisting of organic gases, he said. When these gases are combined and energy is added, it spurs the building blocks of life, including amino acids.

While Jupiter and Saturn have much the same makeup, Smith said, the heat destroys these building blocks. But, he said, Titan may be different and these molecules may possibly be forming right now.

The atmosphere of Jupiter holds another characteristic that may be compared to Earth. Heat on Jupiter is formed within the planet, while Earth forms heat on the surface, he said. But Earth's equator forms heat the same way Jupiter does, he said.

It is "very probable that our understanding (of the equator's atmosphere) will be much better" due to studying Jupiter, Smith said.

"In my mind there is no doubt that man will some day colonize," Smith said, "and that sooner or later we will meet someone else from another place trying to do the same thing."

Throughout the presentation, he mentioned the chances of life on other planets.

Smith said he "didn't want to put too much emphasis on that (the possibility of life on other planets), but it's something that interests everyone."

Smith's lecture was sponsored by the College of Arts & Sciences and the department of physics and astronomy.

Girone art exhibit showcases architect at rigid, linear best

By EVA J. WINKLE
Staff Writer

Vito Girone decided 12 years ago to add a new dimension to his architectural career. He took up painting.

Since that time, he has gained notice as an architect and artist. He has even earned the acclaim of actor Vincent Price, who chose to be photographed last year in front of Girone's "The Reapers" during the Browning Manufacturing Corp. competition in Maysville, Ky.

Girone's style is primarily based on rigid structures and linear development — mainstays from his education as an architect. This is especially true in his European works, which are underscored with impressionistic highlighting.

It is this impressionistic influence that separates his European pieces from those done in the United States. While his scenes from Venice and Florence are reminiscent of Renoir, he devotes his American work primarily to rural scenes, such as his painting of the Mary Todd Lincoln house.

The Renoir influence is especially evident in Girone's "Kneeling Nude with Flower." His use of pastels brings an almost visible, yet secretive aura to the figure, as though the artist has allowed us to glance just for a moment at another man's wife.

Girone's "Santa Maria Della Salute" causes one to remember Joseph Turner's rendition of the same scene, "The Dogana and Santa Maria Della Salute." Both artists chose to give a subtlety to the scene, yet maintained the rigid lines of the structures.

The artist's love for solid forms drives him back to Europe and its urban settings. His interpretation of Italian scenes through an architect's eyes gives one the feeling of looking at impressionistic works of the 19th century with contemporary figures.

Girone says he sketches the scene first, then paints it at a later time.

"You can't always rely on guesswork," he says. "I don't kid myself on these things. I put down what I see."

The only non-scenic piece in the show is the painting Girone labeled, appropriately, "Abstract."

"I went abstract on this one," he said. "I just wanted to get it out of my system."

Girone attended New York University as an undergraduate. He was then accepted to the Baux Arts Institute of Design in New York.

Girone has also attended the Harvard Graduate School of Design and the Crambrook Academy. He studied privately with Eliel Saarinen, whose son designed the St. Louis arch.

He taught at UK and Notre Dame University for 15 years each as an architecture professor. He is now retired and lives in Lexington.

Girone said he received no formal training as an artist. But, he said, "I

New King novel offers abundant gore, chills

It Stephen King/Viking Press ($22.95)

If you have never read a book by Stephen King before, this 1,138-page monster of a novel might be a good one to introduce yourself to King's special brand of horror.

If you aren't a stranger to King's work, well . . .

It simply stated is the embodiment of everything King has written to this point. That's not to say that there's nothing original or intriguing in the premise or plot development, but a lot of the horror elements in it have been used before.

It begins in the autumn of 1957, in the small town of Derry, Maine. Six-year-old George Denbrough sails a boat, made from a sheet of newspaper, down a swollen rain gutter. The boat gets caught in a current and is sucked into a storm drain.

When the child looks into the dark opening of the drain, he sees a friendly looking clown holding a bunch of multicolored balloons in one hand and his paper boat in the other, beckoning to him. "Want your boat, George? . . . and a balloon?"

When George sticks his hand in, the clown's face turns into something so horrible that it "destroyed his sanity in one clawing stroke." The boy's body is found later, left arm ripped off, his expression one of pain and horror.

This incident, one of dozens of child murders that have plagued

BOOK REVIEW

Derry over the years, jerks the reader into a monster-hunt that spans 28 years.

In creating this mammoth tome, King uses every element of horror and gore that he can think of, from fortune cookies that reveal mutated insects when split open to sink drains that spit huge quantities of blood all over the room.

King plays upon the age-old fear of dark and desolate places, a fear that plagues children and adults throughout their lives. His monster is one with many faces, from the aforementioned circus clown to the creature from the Black Lagoon.

His characterizations are perfect, as usual. There aren't many writers today in any genre who can create and flesh out a character like King can. His performers are living, breathing people, and the reader finds himself concerned for the protagonists' well-being.

However, the book, despite its length, does not aspire to the epic proportions of The Stand; it doesn't quite capture the atmospheric claustrophobia of The Shining; like The Talisman, it seems, at times, a little flabby in development and style.

However, don't let the simple fact that the novel is more than 1,100 pages throw you. King's easy, off-the-cuff style is well-suited for long pieces.

You have been warned.

Reagan, Gorbachev plan meeting in Iceland

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, ending the diplomatic tug-of-war provoked by Moscow's arrest of an American journalist, agreed yesterday to meet in Iceland in 10 days to resume the search for an arms control accord.

The surprise summit was arranged as part of a deal that brought the release Monday of Moscow correspondent Nicholas S. Daniloff and the expulsion yesterday of accused Soviet spy Gennadiy Zakharov. Another element was a Soviet pledge to free Yuri Orlov, a prominent Soviet dissident exiled to Siberia, as well as his wife, next week.

Hinting at the card that lured him away from several apparently inflexible public positions taken in recent weeks, Reagan told reporters, "The chances are better than they've been for many years for reaching some agreement on arms reductions."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said those chances include "reasonable prospects" for reducing medium-range missiles in Europe.

U.S. officials refused to call the Oct. 11-12 session between Reagan and Gorbachev a summit, and Shultz said the administration did not expect the talks to produce the signing of a new arms accord.

But Reagan told world financial leaders a short time later at the International Monetary Fund that the October session is intended "to prepare the ground for a productive summit."

Shultz said he still hopes a summit can take place later this year in the United States, as agreed to by Reagan and Gorbachev last year in Geneva. The one-on-one talks in Reykjavik, the secretary said, "will give a special push" to the various talks already going on at lower levels.

Shultz said the hurry-up meeting scheduled in less than two weeks in the capital of the tiny NATO island nation was proposed by Gorbachev in a letter delivered to Reagan on Sept. 19, which also contained the Soviet Union's latest bargaining position on proposed nuclear weapons reductions.

The two sides had been carrying on arms control discussions at various levels while trying separately to settle the case of Daniloff, whose arrest on what Reagan insisted were "trumped up" spy charges cast a dimmed prospects for a summit this year.

Reagan insisted he would never trade Daniloff for Zakharov, who he said was caught red-handed trying to buy U.S. defense secrets for his government. But Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, in several hours of the closed-door meetings in Washington and New York, worked out the package deal that gave both sides what they wanted most — with just enough face-saving provisions to enable both to claim victory.

Reagan, in fact, insisted yesterday that "there was no connection" between Daniloff's release and Zakharov's expulsion.

Asked why that shouldn't be seen as the trade Reagan said he would never make, Shultz suggested it had something to do with the timing.

"Well, I think what we saw here was Daniloff released (Monday), and what I announced (yesterday) was that Zakharov is being released from the Soviet Union and Mr. Orlov and his wife are being released from the Soviet Union," the secretary said. He noted the package also included an eventual reduction in the number of Soviets employed by the U.N., although the United States granted the Soviets a two-week "grace period" to remove some individuals. Shevardnadze "had found very useful to him."

Although neither side would say flatly during the diplomatic showdown that there could be no summit while Daniloff was confined in Moscow, Shultz said yesterday, "I don't think one could have had a fruitful summit without these matters being settled."

And as soon as they were, Reagan immediately took a more conciliatory stand toward the Soviets.

On Monday, as Daniloff flew to freedom with the details of the arrangement still secret, Reagan was asked if he had "blinked" to end the month-long standoff.

"They blinked," he replied.

Asked again yesterday if he could still say the Soviets blinked, Reagan replied, "I should have said that. No comment."

Emergency spending bill passed to keep government going

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress approved an emergency spending bill last night to keep the government operating while Congress and the president wrestle with long-term spending legislation.

The eight-day spending measure was approved 315-101 in the House, and approved by a voice vote in the Senate a short time later.

The Office of Management and Budget notified federal agencies yesterday that workers would report to their jobs today, but be sent home if a spending bill was not imminent by noontime, said OMB spokesman Ed Dale.

The administration would accept a simple extension of government spending authority, as long as it was not loaded up with amendments opposed by the president, Dale said.

The stopgap measure approved by the House would simply continue current policies, said appropriations committee chairman Jamie L. Whitte, D-Miss.

The emergency bill was needed because there appeared to be no chance of a House-Senate compromise on a full-year spending package, that also would be acceptable to the president, by the beginning of the fiscal year at 12:01 a.m. today.

President Reagan has promised to veto the omnibus $562 billion fiscal 1987 spending bill as approved by the House. The Senate's $558 billion version, which the administration has said is closer to what the president wants, was being debated yesterday.

Senate appropriations committee chairman Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., urged his colleagues to finish the spending bill. He complained that the threat of a government shutdown wasn't enough pressure "because increasingly it appears that some people feel that might be the best thing for the sake of the republic."

President Reagan has strongly objected to language in the House bill that he contends would tie his hands in arms talks with the Soviet Union.

The House provisions would require administration compliance with the SALT II treaty, freeze spending on the Star Wars program, limit tests of anti-satellite weapons, ban chemical weapons and ban nuclear weapons testing if the Soviets abide by the same moratorium.

The Senate version was lacking those provisions, although attempts to add some were expected.

There's never been a better choice!

Drug unit won't change operation despite rulings

HEBRON, Ky. (AP) — Adverse rulings from federal judges in two cases will not force a fledgling drug unit at Greater Cincinnati International Airport to change the way it investigates cocaine trafficking, says a top drug agent.

Twice in the past three months, federal judges have ruled that agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration seized cocaine improperly.

In one case, the judge said the agents initially stopped and questioned a woman primarily because she looked suspicious. In the other, the judge ruled agents went beyond reasonable bounds when they entered a hotel room with guns drawn and detained two men for more than an hour without a search or arrest warrant.

"I think any time something like this occurs, it does have a chilling effect to some extent on the people involved in this," said Jim Hogan, agent in charge of the Cincinnati office of the DEA.

Judge Richard Suhrehrich of U.S. District Court in Detroit ruled Monday that prosecutors cannot use 3 pounds of cocaine seized at the airport. In an order filed in federal court in Covington, Suhrehrich said drug agents illegally detained Joslyn Stewart of Los Angeles for questioning on Jan. 10.

The agents said they questioned Stewart after she picked up luggage that apparently had arrived on an earlier flight, made a phone call asking for an address and nervously eyed officers who watched her. They found the cocaine in the suitcase she was carrying.

Suhrehrich said the officers stopped Stewart on little more than a hunch she might be involved in drug trafficking. They also neglected to tell her immediately that she had the right to leave, he said.

In July, Judge David Dowd of Akron, Ohio, ruled that 7.5 pounds of cocaine taken from the car of two Miami men on May 9 could not be used in a trial against them and an associate.

Earlier this month, Dowd reversed his decision, saying the Miami men had no reason to expect privacy in the car and therefore no right to ask for suppression of the cocaine as evidence. Dowd did not express his finding that the agents acted improperly.

Suhrehrich and Dowd ruled on the cases because Judge William Bertlesman of the Covington district was out of town.

Hogan said the two cases are the only ones in the unit's one-year history in which judges refused to let drugs seized by his agents be used as evidence.

"We want to add an element that will further intellectual development, but also to add spiritual and religious values to the University," he said.

The main objective of the Distinguished Speakers Program committee was to acquire a wide variety of speakers, said its chairman, Bernie Vonderheide. The committee is a division of Newman Center Inc., which sponsors the program.

"Another objective was to try to have speakers who are attractive to the University student community," Vonderheide said. He said Greeley's controversy and Foley's sports background make them interesting to students.

Noll said the speakers series, which has been in existence since 1983, has always been well attended. He said the average attendance has been at least 500, with the largest being about 1,000.

Both Noll and Vonderheide anticipate a record crowd for Greeley's speech. It has been moved to the UK Center for the Arts, which Vonderheide said holds about 1,500 people. The other speeches will be given at the Newman Center on Rose Avenue.

The lectures all start at 7:30 p.m. and are free and open to the public.

Miami claims top spot; Oklahoma falls to sixth

By BRIAN TRUDELL
Associated Press

Miami of Florida coach Jimmy Johnson says he's wary about whether his team can remain No. 1 the rest of college football season, but Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer thinks the Hurricanes should have smooth sailing.

"It's obviously early in the season and there's a lot of football left to be played," Johnson said. "I look at Miami of Ohio beating LSU, and I know that in this game you'd better be ready to play every week."

Miami, which beat Oklahoma 28-16 Saturday, replaced the Sooners as the top-ranked team in The Associated Press' weekly poll yesterday by receiving 56 of 58 first-place votes.

The Hurricanes have seven opponents remaining on the regular schedule with a combined record of 10-18-2 — one of which, East Carolina, has the longest Division I losing streak at 13 games.

"They shouldn't stub their toe too rest of the way with the schedule they have," Switzer said after Saturday's loss.

Miami's remaining seven regular-season opponents are Northern Illinois (0-5), West Virginia (2-2), Cincinnati (2-2), Florida State (1-2-1), Pitt (2-1-1), Tulsa (3-2) and East Carolina (0-4). Only Florida State has been in the Top 20 this year.

"It's ironic that statements have been made about the rest of our schedule," Johnson said. "Before we beat Florida and Oklahoma, everybody talked about how tough the West Virginia and Pitt game would be on the road, and Florida State at home."

"I know how good West Virginia, Pitt and Florida State can be. Florida State lost to Michigan by two points in Ann Arbor so I know how tough that game will be," he added. "It's a lot tougher schedule than people think."

The Hurricanes received 1,156 out of a possible 1,180 points, with Alabama and Penn State the only schools to receive first-place votes.

Alabama, Nebraska and Michigan, which knocked Florida State out of the Top 20 for the first time in three years with a 20-18 victory, each moved up one spot to be ranked second, third and fourth, respectively.

Penn State, which owned East Carolina, 42-17, moved from seventh to fifth while Oklahoma dropped to sixth. Auburn and Arkansas advanced to eighth and ninth, and Southern California jumped from 12th to No. 10.

The second 10, in order, consisted of Arizona, Iowa, Washington, Baylor, Texas A&M, UCLA, Arizona Pitt (2-1-1), Tulsa (3-2) and East

Injuries in Bearcat game put damper on Cats' second win

By CHRIS ALDRIDGE
Contributing Writer

Although the Kentucky Wildcats defeated Cincinnati last Saturday, a rash of injuries put a damper on the post-game celebration.

Two players, running back Al Baker and tight end Matt Lucas, suffered season-ending injuries.

Baker, who was considered to be one of the country's top high school running backs last year, broke his right ankle in the third quarter of Saturday's contest. The freshman from Cadiz, Ky., will miss the remainder of the season and is expected to be granted a redshirt season by the NCAA.

Lucas, a senior from Baltimore, Ohio, was injured more seriously, tearing two ligaments in his right knee.

Both players underwent successful surgeries Sunday morning at Central Baptist Hospital in Lexington. After the game, some people wondered if the artificial playing surface in Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium was the cause of the rash of injuries to a relatively healthy UK squad.

At his weekly media luncheon yesterday, UK coach Jerry Claiborne dismissed the Astroturf as a cause of the injuries.

He said Baker simply got sandwiched between two Cincinnati defenders, with his right foot caught behind him. He also said Lucas' injury didn't involve the playing surface.

Injuries caused a shortage of tight ends for the Wildcats in Saturday's game.

Both Mark Wheeler and Joe Curry suffered minor injuries.

"We took four tight ends on the trip and three of them got hurt," Claiborne said.

Trainer Al Green expects all the players, with the exception of Baker and Lucas, to be ready for Saturday night's homecoming game with Southern Mississippi.

Claiborne said the two key interceptions in Saturday's game by linebacker Chris Chenault and defensive back David Johnson were important in determining the outcome of the game.

"When Chris Chenault made the interception, that was a very, very big football play," he said. After intercepting a Danny McCann pass, Chenault raced untouched 65 yards for a touchdown.

On the pass Johnson intercepted and returned 95 yards for a touchdown, Claiborne said he was proud of the five "real good blocks" and the "sudden change from defense to offense" his team made.

Those two scores marked the first time since 1974 that the Wildcats returned at least two interceptions for touchdowns.

Johnson's return tied Rodger Bird for the fourth-longest interception return in UK history.

Overall, Claiborne was pleased with UK's performance against the Bearcats.

"I think we played a pretty good football game against a team that was aggressive," he said. "I think they were geared up to play us."

"We're proud of the way they're playing right now," he said. "They're playing hard, that's the best thing about them. They're giving us great effort, they're practicing hard and their attitude is very good right now."

However, Claiborne said the Wildcats' offensive production slipped a bit in the contest.

"I felt like we sputtered a little bit on offense," he said. "We didn't get that consistency that we would like to have."

UK, 2-0-1, will play Southern Mississippi Saturday night at Commonwealth Stadium. Kickoff for the homecoming game will be at 7:30.

Claiborne says his players aren't overlooking the Golden Eagles (2-2), who are coached by former UK assistant coach Jim Carmody.

"I think our players understand how good they are," he said.

SLAP must exercise caution in facing UK administration

Tonight the Student Government Association will consider a resolution calling for a change in UK's alcohol policy.

Included in the resolution is a request for a state attorney general's opinion on the privacy of the dormitory room.

We think that it's fine for David Botkins and SGA to consider asking for a change in the University's policy.

However, the way in which Botkins has gone about his campaign is, to say the least, suspect.

Instead of quietly approaching Joseph Burch, acting vice chancellor for student affairs, and asking for a change in policy, Botkins has done everything possible to publicize his crusade.

He has essentially tried to tie the hands of the administration and back them into a corner, giving them no choice but to assume the role of police officers enforcing a law.

That sort of police state might not go over too well with the majority of the student body who are, by the way, under 21.

The problem could have been solved a lot easier.

Botkins and the rest of his cohorts in SLAP — Student Leaders Against Prohibition — could have achieved the same results in a much quieter fashion.

They could have approached Burch and confronted him with their complaints.

Burch said he would listen to the students.

Instead, Botkins and the group have opted for every commercial technique in the book (i.e. TV, newspaper and general hearsay) to air their opinions.

So we think it's great that Botkins and SGA may question and attempt to change a University policy. But we just want them to know that they will also be held responsible for the repercussions of such a change.

Shaun, the state is ambiguous as to the law concerning alcohol in residence halls. That is why the attorney general is being asked to address the issue. As a resident adviser in Kirwan I, you should be aware of the obscenity concerning state law versus University policy.

For the last several years, the University has failed to enforce the alcohol policy within the residence halls. Because resident advisers currently do not enforce the policy, what would be the problem with letting residents 21 years of age drink in their individual rooms?

How could this change the status quo? We are all aware of the possession and consumption of alcohol will continue to exist whether enforced or not.

We understand as students of the University that leases are contracts with specific regulations. But doesn't the University respect its greatest source of financial income enough to give that source a fundamental right?

Mr. Meredith, if you really want to have a puppy or kittens in your dorm, get up some campuswide support (and ACT ON IT). Remember, though, if the topic of pets in residence halls is of concern or importance to all residents, then it could be debated, but until you do YOUR homework and get hundreds of names on petitions, don't try to equate the two.

As elected senators of the Student Government Association, Mr. Botkins and Miss Weaver have accepted the obligation and the responsibility of representing the voice of students. And the hundreds of signatures Botkins has obtained indicates that the majority of students want this legal right to privacy.

Mr. Meredith, as far as your comment about Botkins and Weaver seeking publicity, it just so happens that this is the most newsworthy issue to hit campus since divestment of stock in South Africa.

We are well aware that a Category C offense is part of our rental agreement, and that is why we want to change the terms of the agreement. Mr. Meredith, it just so happens that most benchmark institutions comparable to UK have alcohol policies similar to that of which we are advocating.

This is according to a group of senators who just returned from a fact-finding mission at Vanderbilt University. Mr. Meredith, according to in-depth surveys, statistics show that when you deny college adults their right to drink in residence halls, the DUI rate escalates.

UK changing

When I came to UK in 1983, UK was a fun place. It had a good campus life. Since then, many things have changed.

Greek rush is now dry. The Sigma Nu beer blast has been abolished.

This transit. They didn't offer any at all, just an opinion that seems to have been rolled off-the-cuff. But look again.

They own five parcels of land, potential development sites, surrounding the Salvation Army. So when the organization requested help from the Webbs, it played right into their hands. If the Webbs' suggestion were possible, they could kill two birds with one stone. By purchasing the land now owned by the Salvation Army, they could continue their "re-vitalization" of Lexington and get street people out of their way at the same time.

Yet in their haste to cast Lexington's less fortunate into exile, the Webbs didn't stop to consider the fact that all other social services are downtown. In the words of Salvation Army commander Howard Burt, "what would they do if we moved? Take a taxi?"

Webbs lack solutions for street people

However, it would be unfair to put all of the blame on the shoulders of the Webbs. They're too easy to point a finger at.

The responsibility for these people's welfare lies with the city.

This is a social problem, not a private or personal one. Street people don't choose to wander aimlessly, in hopes of nothing more than survival. They are forced to. Many have physical or psychological problems that prevent them from holding down jobs. Some simply are too bound to their troublesome past to ever get another chance at holding down a job.

And where are they supposed to go for help? Unless they are veterans, rehabilitation programs are not available to them. No one back home is there to foot the bill. They have cut all of their ties. For many, their only option other than the streets would be an institution. And this is no option. There is still a dignity factor here.

Because these people are largely incapable of helping themselves, the responsibility belongs to the city. In New York there are 210,000 street people. They are a community in themselves. It's out of hand. In Lexington there are only 200 vagrants — an amount that can be dealt with and helped.

Rehabilitation programs and service possibilities should be constructed by social experts and offered these people. It's up to Lexington as a city to accept this responsibility and fund it. If the Webbs had any social conscience, they would help. But I'm not holding my breath.

Until then, why all of the bitching by local businesses and shoppers? These people are harmless. They're not going to approach you with knives and guns. They can't afford knives and guns. All they want are cigarettes.

should have the right to consume alcohol in a place where they spend most of their time. What should they do, drive around just so they can have a beer?

This basic right to drink if you are 21 and older should also be explicitly stated in the lease. Many people do not have the choice to live off campus. Many students must live on campus because of financial reasons, transportation problems, etc.

Those who are of legal age should not have to relinquish their right to drink alcohol because they don't have enough money to live somewhere else.

As freshmen (17 and 18 years old), we were told that we could drink alcohol in the dorm, but it could not be openly displayed. Labels, etc., had to be hidden. This means that in the past, this alcohol rule has been ignored. There were never any big problems that arose from it except for a few who drank too much and got slightly sick.

Why all of a sudden is the University making an issue out of this? They are changing the rules in the middle of the game.

I am not condoning the right of minors to consume alcohol in the dorms. That is another issue. However, people who are of age should have this right.

Part of being educated and attending a university is to learn and to open people's minds. This is part of growing up.

This rule and many in the past are doing exactly the opposite. Why does the University want to hide the fact that people, especially those of legal age, want and will drink? It doesn't make sense.

Believing in something is one thing, but to push your beliefs on someone else is not the American way. However, having others' ideals forced upon other people seems to be the new trend here at UK.

Columnist's viewpoint, style deserve more credit than given

So now that Urch girl, with her editorial defecation and Woolworth mascara, is trying to deprive us of our constitutional rights while she depraves us with her alleged live-in lovers and Babylonian whoredom.

Just like a Connie liberal. When are the people of these United States gonna wake up and smell the coffee a brewin'! Our great nation was built on the Pat Robertson's of the past.

Like Brother Pat said, "The Constitution of the United States is a marvelous document for self-government by Christian people, but the minute you turn the document into the hands of non-Christian people and athletes, they can use it to destroy the very foundations of our society — and that's what has been happening."

Amen, Brother Pat. I don't believe anyone would ever argue the fact that "Jews and blacks and lesbians and hispanics" (and syntactically incorrect columnists) are not covered in "We the people."

What's all this talk about the Constitution for anyway? Like that one pious young lady wrote in, it's "the reading of Supreme Court cases more than the reading of the constitutional document."

Of course, Anita, you and I are astounded at Urch's ignorance of "Pat Robertson and his beliefs." She probably doesn't even realize that he was just kidding when he said that Supreme Court decisions are not binding on the president. (And I didn't rely on "hearsay" from my friends, or Kalk's, for that one. The Rev. John Buchanan Jr., a former Republican congressman, first noted it, and it was printed in the Boston Globe and the Lexington Herald-Leader.)

But the thing that really gets my goat is that Brother Pat already gave his word that he has no intention of mixing church dealings with his presidential, and still these liberal factionists are running around like headless chickens in a frying pan, screaming about separation of church and state. I mean, if you can't trust an evangelist, who can you trust?

Like that one fellow wrote in to the Kernel, if it turned out that Pat got himself elected and then went hog-wild with his morals, those representatives could cast a few votes and he'd be out on his ear.

Sure, he might turn the presidential yard dog loose on a few homosexuals and feminists and anti-Christian types before they got to him — but if that's what the majority wants . . .

Hummm . . . I've digressed (maybe even dramatically rambled, as is purported Kernel columnist style). Let me switch editorial bandwagons from Robertson back to Urch.

Now what's all this talk about errant nipples?

The editorial page is no place for this . . . this . . . this clever phraseology. What are these subversive Kernel columnists trying to do anyway? Give us their opinions. In their own particular idiom? With STYLE!

A campus newspaper, any newspaper, is no place for style.

And if you want MY candid opinion, "errant nipples" is a blatant example of pseudo so-called liberal factionists undermining the noble attempts of the Meese Commission by transforming pornography into the printed word.

I can tell you right now there would be no errant nipples in Pat Robertson's America.

Hell, there might not even be any nipples.

Trade deficit plunges after record high

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit shrank dramatically to $13.3 billion in August after hitting a record high the month before, the government said yesterday. Analysts said the 26.2 percent improvement may be signaling that the worst of the problems are over.

But in less optimistic news, the government reported that its chief economic forecasting gauge fell for the third time in the past four months and new-home sales suffered a fifth consecutive decline.

While the trade improvement was seen as encouraging, economists cautioned that it was not signaling that exports and imports were headed back into balance anytime soon. Analysts predicted the deficit for this year will top $170 billion, far ahead of last year's $148.5 billion record.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the bulge in the trade deficit in the first half of this year came in part from higher prices of imports, reflecting the decline in the value of the dollar. As those prices deter sales in this country, the deficit will show improvement, he said.

"The sharp improvement from July to August may be the turning point in our trade deficit," Baldrige said in a statement. The administration is counting on improved trade to help boost economic growth in the second half of the year.

But the Commerce Department also reported that its chief forecasting tool, the Index of Leading Indicators, fell 0.2 percent in August, following declines of 0.1 percent in May and 0.2 percent in June. In July, the index rose 1 percent.

The index, which is made up of 11 forward-pointing economic statistics, has been growing weakly for much of this year, reflecting the lackluster economy.

"The index is consistent with the basic direction of the economy right now, which is flat," said Lawrence Chimriner, president of Chase Econometrics.

Adding to this pessimism was a third government report that said housing sales plummeted 12.4 percent in August, the fifth consecutive setback and the biggest decline in more than four years.

The drop left sales at an annual rate of just 584,000 units, the slowest pace in two years. Sales of new homes, propelled by plunging mortgage rates, had boomed earlier this year, but analysts said that pace was unsustainable because much of the pent-up demand for new homes has been satisfied.

The trade report showed that the big improvement in August came from a 13.3 percent drop in imports, which totaled $30.93 billion.

Daniloff returns from Soviet Union 'vindicated'

CHANTILLY, Va. — A jubilant Nicholas Daniloff returned yesterday to the United States, saying "I feel vindicated" and declaring that improved U.S.-Soviet relations are the "silver lining" in the cloud of his arrest on espionage charges.

The 31-year-old U.S. News & World Report correspondent, appearing at a news conference shortly after his arrival at Washington-Dulles International Airport here, held up a "Free Nick Daniloff T-shirt" that had been altered. "Free Nick Daniloff," the new version read.

Nick Daniloff, the new version read.

Daniloff noted that the United States and the Soviet Union had announced that President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev will meet in Iceland on Oct. 11-12 and said, "I am pleased the cloud that hung over Soviet-American affairs is dissipating. This is a wonderful thing."

Referring to his Soviet heritage, Daniloff recalled that his Russian grandmother in New Hampshire used to tell him that "there's a silver lining in every cloud. I feel that what has happened, as I've been flying across the ocean, has really illustrated that."

Daniloff said that Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze spent 20 hours negotiating his release and as a result have gotten to know each other better as negotiators and as human beings.

Daniloff met the American press corps after a joyful reunion with his family.

Upon their arrival at the airport, Daniloff and his wife, Ruth, were whisked from the Pan American World Airways jet to the airport terminal for a reunion with daughter Miranda, 23, and son Caleb, 16.

After hugs and embraces, Daniloff joined his family and friends in hoisting glasses of champagne in a toast to his liberation. He took a bunch of yellow roses brought by Miranda, and clutched them as he visited casually with friends.

Late yesterday, the White House announced that time had been cleared on Reagan's schedule for a visit by the Daniloffs to the Oval Office today.

"Right now I only write a few checks a month. But when I graduate, I'll need an account that does more."

"All I need for the time being is an account that lets me write several checks every month... for books, bills, and odds and ends. That's exactly what BANK ONE's One-Star checking service lets me do.

"It's called Economy Checking... part of BANK ONE's new Four-Star★Checking Service. For a low monthly fee—about what you'd pay for a cheeseburger and fries—I get all the checking services I need. Plus a free Owl card, which really comes in handy when I need cash in a hurry. But the best thing is that when my checking needs call for a more sophisticated account, it'll be a snap to upgrade. All I have to do is ask."

Check into Four-Star★Checking Service at BANK ONE. The line of checking accounts you can never outgrow.
