DATE RAPE: Our Hidden Problem Part 1

ILLUSTRATION BY STAFF ARTIST DANIELLE TURPEN

Date rape a common occurrence, but it's not reported by victims

By ELIZABETH WADE
Assistant News Editor

A problem exists in college campuses and across the country today of which you probably are not aware. It's called acquaintance, or date, rape, and it has become our hidden problem.

Hidden, because very few people understand or will acknowledge that date rape even happens on our campuses and in our homes.

Hidden, because society still stigmatizes rape as an act that is not a crime, but something a woman brings on herself.

Hidden, because the emotional scars that date rape leaves keep many of its victims from reporting it.

Date, or acquaintance, rape is a forced sexual encounter or intercourse with someone the victim knows.

In 1985 alone, one in eight women on college campuses were raped, according to a study of nearly 7,000 college students conducted by Mary Koss, a professor of psychology with Kent State University.

Koss termed it "hidden rape" because it is widely unreported.

At UK, there has been only one rape reported in the last five years, but officials acknowledge there have been others that have gone unreported.

Officials hesitate to say that date rape is a widespread, or significant, problem at UK, but they readily admit that they just don't know for sure.

"That is part of the frustration of dealing with (date rape); no one knows how extensive it is," according to Jake Karnes, assistant dean of students. "We know it happens. We know it happens here, and that concerns us."

"I do programs on acquaintance rape and I have not had any reported, but after the programs these girls come up and tell me the scenario," said Stephanie Bastin, UK's crime prevention coordinator. "We know it is happening and not being reported."

By Kentucky law, a person is guilty of rape in the first degree when he has sexual intercourse with another person by force or without that person's consent.

Barry Burkhardt, an associate professor of psychology at Auburn University who has done several studies on acquaintance rape, said acquaintance rape occurs most frequently during the victim's freshman year of college.

Burkhardt interviewed 600 women who said they had been raped by someone they knew. Only four of the women reported it.

Koss and Burkhardt recently have worked together, and their results have been similar.

Last-minute TD hands 'Niners win over Cincinnati

By DAVE GOLDBERG
Associated Press

MIAMI — Joe Montana hit John Taylor with a 10-yard touchdown pass with 24 seconds left as San Francisco staked its claim as the Team of the '80s last night with a 20-16 victory over Cincinnati in the most dramatic Super Bowl.

The victory was achieved through the brilliance of quarterback Montana and wide receiver Jerry Rice, who led the '49ers.

The winning score came at the end of a 92-yard drive, engineered by Montana, whose touchdown pass gave him a Super Bowl record with 357 yards passing. Twelve of his completions were to Rice, who caught 12 passes for 222 yards, both also records.

It was the fifth consecutive win for an NFL team, but by far the most dramatic — the previous four had been by an average score of 41-14.

It also gave San Francisco coach Bill Walsh his third Super Bowl win in 10 seasons as the '49ers coach. It would be a fitting climax to a career that may end this week when the 57-year-old Walsh might announce that he will step down as San Francisco's coach.

The winning drive began after Jim Breese had kicked his third field goal of the game, a 40-yarder with 3:20 left, to give the Bengals a 16-13 lead. A holding call on the kickoff forced the '49ers to start from their own 30-yard-line with a little more than three minutes left in the game.

But Montana, who threw for 23 of 36, made himself the quarterback of the decade on the winning drive. He passed for 8 yards to Rice, 9 yards to tight end John Frank and 17 more to Rice. Then he hit Roger Craig for 13 yards and hit Rice 27 yards over the middle on a second-and-20 play.

After an 8-yard pass to Craig, he hit Rice for 10 yards to set up the winning score to Taylor.

The game that was supposed to be a shootout went almost 45 minutes without a touchdown, the longest dry spell in the 23 Super Bowls.

Then came two within 91 seconds.

After Mike Cofer's 32-yard field goal tied the game 6-6 for San Francisco with 50 seconds left in the third quarter, Stanford Jennings took the kickoff for a score, racing untouched through the San Francisco defense until Terry Greer ran him down and tripped him as Jennings fell over the goal line.

But the '49ers, whose offense sputtered, suddenly came to life, going 85 yards in just four plays to tie the score at 13-13. Montana hit Jerry Rice for 31 yards, Roger Craig for 40, then Rice for a touchdown in the left corner of the end zone from 14 yards out.

The '49ers got as far as the Cincinnati 55-yard-line with 1:13 left.

The first half of what was supposed to be a shootout ended with the score tied 3-3.

Bush and wife attend national prayer service

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush, taking a pause from celebrative inauguration events, attended a national worship service yesterday where he was recognized as the "symbol of unity."

The solemn interfaith "National Prayer Service" in the sanctuary of the ornate Washington Cathedral served as a quiet, contemplative climax to a frantic five-day inauguration festival.

While Bush worshipped with about 3,200 others, top aides appeared on Sunday television interview shows to discuss the more secular matters of budget deficits and U.S.-Soviet relations.

The new president and first lady Barbara Bush knelt and prayed silently when they entered the cathedral, and then joined Vice President Dan Quayle and his wife, Marilyn, in a front pew.

Presiding over the service was the Rev. John T. Walker, Episcopalian bishop of Washington D.C., who noted that the Bushes, Episcopalians themselves, had "visited with us many times in the past."

He said he hoped to see them often, and the Bushes had said previously that they intended to attend Sunday church services regularly.

Walker spoke of "a nation united in the person of our president. He is our symbol of unity."

Bush, who surprised top aides and startled White House reporters with several spontaneous appearances in public in recent days, remained for the most part behind the scenes yesterday.

He hosted an afternoon reception for members of the inauguration committee and set aside the early evening to join his family in the White House residence theater to watch the Superbowl on wide-screen television.

He seemed ready to relax after attending a series of inauguration balls Friday, and two more parties on Saturday night. At a youth rhythm-and-blues party, he got up on the stage and strummed a guitar a few times.

As Bush prepared for his first full week as president, his chief of staff, former New

WASHINGTON — "Why Don't We Get Drunk and Screw?" was coming across the jukebox at some 26-40 hangout on the hill a few blocks from the capitol, where just that morning George Bush took the 200-year-old oath of office and became America's 41st president. Jimmy Buffett's was the best idea I had heard the whole day — perhaps since long before then — and I wondered why Bush hadn't figured Buffett somewhere in making "kinder the face of the nation, gentler the face of the world."

John, my traveling companion who was in no better shape than I was, was dropping money into the jukebox, carrying on what I assumed was a disjointed conversation with one of the bar patrons.

Sean, our gracious host and often reluctant guide, was on the phone to Sarah, trying, I guessed, to talk her down from the shock of receiving the panic-stricken message I left on her answering machine a little while before.

I was sitting at the table — tired, wired, strung out, sipping off an overpriced pitch-

Cats break Vols, jinx for victory

By BARRY REEVES
Staff Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — UK coach Eddie Sutton made a promise earlier in the week that he would use his bench more. Against the University of Tennessee, he did not lie. Reserve UK forward Deron Feldhaus, who had reservations about his coach's promise, not only played 23 minutes in the game, but sank two free throws with 12 seconds remaining in the game to give UK a four-point lead.

"I didn't really think he was serious about it (more playing time)," Feldhaus said after the game. "I was pretty nervous when I first went into the game, but it's a good thing I got over it."

It was good for UK that Feldhaus got over his nervousness because his two free throws turned out to be the difference, as Tennessee's Greg Bell hit a three-pointer at the buzzer to make the final score 66-65.

"I just went up there and shot the free throws like I do everyday in practice," Feldhaus explained with a smile on his face.

"Deron is a blue-collar worker, a fighter and tonight he gave us a big lift when he hit some big time free throws," Sutton said.

UK controlled the tempo of the game by being patient offensively and stingy defensively. The Wildcats hit 61.5 percent of their shots from the field in the game compared to Tennessee's cold 30 percent.

"We told our squad coming in that the big key in the ball game would be how well we controlled the tempo," Sutton said. "We felt like that would allow us to take the crowd out of the game."

"We took good shots, but they just didn't fall," said Tennessee coach Don DeVoe following his team's loss. "You don't expect to win when you shoot as poorly as we did tonight."

UK's hope to win looked dim when sophomore center LeRon Ellis, who finished with 12 points in only 21 minutes, was whistled for his third foul with 12:05 remaining in the first half.

Little did DeVoe and his team know that when senior forward Dyron Nix hit two free throws to give UT a 16-15 lead with 11:31 left in the first half it would be his teams last lead of the game. Nix was held to only 14 points in the game.

On UK's next possession, Feldhaus hit a 10-foot jumper in the lane to give the Cats the lead for good.

"We never could get the lead back. It's mighty tough to win if you can't get the lead," DeVoe said. "You have to give them (UK) a lot of credit."

UK increased its lead to eight points in the first half before going to the locker room with a 34-29 halftime lead. The Vols had shot only 22.9 percent from the field in the first period.

The Cats picked up in the second half, where they left off before intermission, and pulled out to a nine-point lead with 15:43 remaining before the home team decided turn up their intensity defensively.

The Volunteers then went on a 13-4 scoring run tying the score at 49 with 8:40 remaining. The game would be nip and tuck the rest of the way.

When Tennessee tied the score, the young Wildcats looked a little rattled and ready to give up after making turnovers on their last four possessions. UK turned the ball over

"People thought I was crazy because I looked forward to this game all along," Miller said. "I really like playing in front of large, hostile crowds."

"I am real proud of our ball club because they played very hard and held their poise late in the game when they made the run and the crowd got into the game," Sutton said.

But the young Cats held their cool down the stretch thanks to the leadership of junior guard Derrick Miller, who scored 15 of his game-high 23 points in the second half.

Dominating Lady Vols demolish UK 101-57

By TOM SPALDING
Sports Editor

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The UK Lady Vols came in to Thompson-Boling Arena Saturday night with a six-game winning streak and something to prove — that UK is no longer a dorm team in the Southeastern Conference.

Sporting a 10-6 record and 1-0 league mark, the Lady Vols entertained thoughts of upsetting the No. 2-ranked University of Tennessee Lady Vols, a squad with as imposing a front line as its 14-1 record.

But if UK is ever to vault to the ranks of SEC contender, it sure won't be this year — not after the 44-point bruising the Lady Vols gave them.

The Lady Vols had so much depth (UT reserves accounted for 46 points and 27 rebounds), so much talent (no starter played more than 26 minutes) and so much crowd support (the official attendance was listed at 8,693) that they proved UK has a long way to go before it catches up.

"Tennessee is the best team we have played by far," said UK coach Sharon Fanning.

How ugly was the game? Tennessee forced 14 first half turnovers and used a 19-0 run to build a 27-4 lead early in the contest. UT coach Pat Head-Summitt, probably sensing it was over, went to her bench. They still led 47-23 at halftime.

How ugly? The public address announcer named the player of the game — Deandra Charles, who scored 15 points — with well over 12 minutes left in the game, adding insult to injury.

How ugly? Comfortably ahead 98-57 with three seconds left, a high school band that played during halftime of the UK-UT men's basketball game earlier Saturday night shouted "we want 100."

UT forward Regina Clark obliged, drilling a turn-around three-pointer with no time on the clock to top the century mark.

How ugly? Enough to remind the Lady Vols how good the conference is.

"When you go into a game and your game plan is not executed at all you're really in trouble," Fanning said.

UK's charge was led by Ruth Ann Mountain, who led the Lady Vols starters in scoring with 14 points.

New DUI program offered on campus is a positive sign

Last year, alcohol-related accidents killed more than 23,000 people on America's roads. And a good number of the people involved in the accidents are between the age of 18-24.

In order to decrease that figure, most experts agree that peoples' attitudes toward drinking and driving must change.

A new state-sanctioned program that will begin this spring at UK to counsel first-time DUI offenders or students convicted of any other substance-related driving offense is an encouraging sign that government and local officials are serious about addressing the problem.

The diversion program — called the "3D" program for drinking, drug use and driving — is a joint project between the dean of students office and Counseling and Testing Center.

Persons convicted of a DUI offense for the first time in Kentucky have the option of shortening the time their operator's license is revoked from six months to 30 days by successfully completing an alcohol-drug education program.

Several such programs are offered in the central Kentucky area, but the one that will be offered at UK this semester will be different in that it will be uniquely tailored to address the specific needs and concerns of the college-age DUI offender.

According to Todd Warnick of the Counseling and Testing Center, the major benefit of the program is that it is held on campus and geared toward young adults. Because DUI offenders are not allowed to drive for 30 days, it is more practical for students to attend the program on campus, he said.

Another benefit of the program is that it is geared toward college students' needs and problems.

An additional advantage of the program is that it will be conducted by a staff of educational and counseling professionals, which will ensure that students will be receiving professional counseling.

At least one UK student has died this year because of drunken driving and at least two others have been critically injured because they were involved in a drunken-driving accident. Programs like the 3D are positive steps the community and University can take to reduce the number of future DUI tragedies.

Should UK's new program be a success, other state universities would do well to begin similar programs and help curb the problem of drunken driving accidents.

Kernel Checklist

A weekly public service of the Viewpoint Page to help keep its readers abreast of the hot items in the universe.

✓ A Breath of Fresh Air. George Herbert Walker Bush. The man who was described as a "walking political corpse" by many political pundits two years ago became the nation's 41st president Friday. Although Bush's inauguration speech was far from historic, it established a spirit of community and bipartisanship this nation needs to get out of the mess eight years of Ronald Reagan got it into.

✓ Where Was James? SGA President James Rose. Since the UK athletic department decided to take away 400 student tickets to the men's basketball games, not even an official peep has been heard from the office of James Rose. While the action may have been warranted, it would be nice for the student leader to voice some concern, rather than acting like a high school student council president and concentrate on a dance.

✓ Slam Dunk. John Thompson. Georgetown University men's basketball coach John Thompson walked off the floor of a game last week in protest of the NCAA's stiffer requirements for student-athletes. Although asking a high school student to have a 700 on the SAT or 15 on the ACT and grade point average of 2.0 is a reasonable expectation, Thompson charged it discriminates against minorities. The NCAA, ever worried about its image and not its mission, capitulated late last week by saying the new rule likely will be reversed.

✓ And They're Off. Student Government Association Elections. At least two tickets for SGA executive branch have been slated and as many as four other students are expected to jump into the race soon. With SGA having one of its more disappointing terms, this year's crop of candidates need to start the campaign off on a positive note by forgetting about their resumes and remembering who they are running to represent.

✓ A City Divided. Miami. Race riots raged through parts of Miami last week, leaving at least two dead and hundreds injured. The incident, which was ignited when a white police officer shot a black man on a motorcycle, was just another grim reminder of how far this nation has to go before there is racial equality.

SLIDE ONE PROPOSAL FOR NEW "3-D" PROGRAM

The final decision

Meeting about the afterlife makes the future more secure

Well, we had put it off as long as possible until we figured there was no rhyme nor reason to delay any more.

Feeling both healthy and optimistic about the future, we sat down with our funeral director to make our final arrangements.

We had dreaded it as much as most folks do, but we kept coming back to the idea that dying and what to do about mortal remains is the responsibility of the person who is the main participant.

Leaving the grim business to loved ones or total strangers seemed to us to be considerably irresponsible.

Loved ones will be spared much unnecessary agony, and total strangers won't give a whoop one way or the other.

As for myself, I'd given some thought to cremation, but I finally ruled it out after considering several aspects of it.

Ever since I was a child, and first memorized the "Cremation of Sam McGee" — "... Then I made a hike, for I didn't like to bear him sizzle so, and the heavens scowled and the bushes howled and the wind began to blow ..." — that made a lasting and mostly negative impression on me.

Even the last lines of Robert Service's poem — "And there sat Sam, looking cool and calm in the heat of the furnace roar, and he wore a smile you could see a mile, and he said, 'Please close the door, it's fine in here but I greatly fear you'll get in the cold and storm. Since I left Plum Tree down in Tennessee it's the first time I've been warm' ..." — not even those words did I find comforting.

Dear Counselor: I would like to improve my grade point average this semester. A friend has suggested that I increase the amount of time I study.

She said I should be studying at least two hours for every hour I spend in class. Since I am taking 12 hours this would mean studying 24 hours a week.

Is she right? I don't think many of my friends spend that much time studying. I work 20 hours per week and it would really push me to study that many hours. How can I manage time for studying? Paul

Dear Paul: You are not alone in your dilemma of how to manage time for studies. This is one of the biggest challenges facing all students.

Yes, it is true that two hours of study is recommended for each hour in class and this assumes you are an average student with a grade point average of 2.0.

As you can imagine, the amount of time needed to make a satisfactory grade in any particular class will depend on such factors as your background in the area and your teacher's expectations.

If you truly want to improve your grade point average, you must be prepared to spend the time required to do well in your specific classes. Some classes will require more time than others, but two hours of study time per hour in Therefore, I opted for mould'ring in the grave.

Besides, if I were cremated, it would seem only right to have something to say in advance about the disposition of the ashes.

Being on somebody's mantlepiece, in somebody's safe deposit box or even in the ground held neither special nor cooling appeal for me.

There was a moment when I thought it would be rather nice to be scattered over the farm from a plane.

Fine, but at what time of day? If it were sunrise then my loved one would probably spend a restless night. If it were sunset, then she would have an equally gloomy evening.

If it were high noon, it might come across as melodramatic — "Wouldn't you know he'd have it done for the widest possible audience?"

As for sprinkling the ashes in Plum Lick Creek, final destination the Gulf of Mexico, that might be even more distasteful.

So, cremation was out, mould'ring was in, and it was time to talk about it with the undertaker (actually, they don't seem to like that term as much as they used to — "funeral arranger" or "funeral director" is probably more preferred.)

In any event, instead of going to his home, we invited him and his wife to our place. Sitting at the head of one's own table affords one a much more commanding position, and at least there, one feels more comfortable and confident about directing the conversation.

Therefore, we proceeded through the before-dinner-drink, the white wine with the seafood salad, the main course gumbo, the pecan pie, a la mode and the brandy in the coffee without once mentioning the hereafter.

Symbolically, it might have been considered a trial run at a last meal. No matter, we savored it for the delicious moment that it was. We retired to the front room of the Issac Shelby Crouch house, where doubtless during the past 138 years there have been funeral services and many a conversation about how they should be done.

"There was a time when I thought my final resting place would be here on the farm. But, then I began to think about all the abandoned family burial places from one end of Kentucky to the other, and finally I said, 'no, that won't do.'"

The funeral director skillfully let me do most of the talking.

"I finally came to the realization that I ought to be buried in Grandfather's and Grandmother's plot in North Middletown. That's where my mother is, too, and there's plenty of room there."

And why not I? And why not my loved one, who watches and listens from across the room as I unburden my body and soul?

"No metal caskets for me," she said.

"Wood, then?" said the funeral director, breaking his silence.

"Yes," said she. "Let's make them both walnut."

I replied, "And don't forget the Olympia Marching Band on the return from the cemetery," she said with a smile.

By midnight, the plans were formed.

We said our goodbyes, and went to bed to love, to sleep, to dream, to live each day without concern, and without regret.

For now, we spoke no more of dying.

Key to good grades is planning time

class is still a good general guideline.

We are all equal in that each of us is given 168 hours per week. In your case you could spend 142 hours doing the following:

- 12 hours attending class
- 24 hours studying
- 20 hours working
- 21 hours eating
- 56 hours sleeping
- 9 hours personal hygiene

This leaves 26 hours per week or a margin of about 3½ hours per day for recreation, travel, errands and other activities. Admittedly, this is not a large margin and will require some careful budgeting of time, but it is not impossible.

I suggest that one week you keep a record of how you actually spend your time. This record will allow you to get a better idea of where and how you actually spend your time.

Also, it can help you become aware of how you may be wasting time by watching television, making phone calls or socializing.

This is not to say recreation and socializing are not important. Indeed, they are important and should be planned. However, if making good grades is a high priority, recreation and fun will have to be limited and worked around study time.

A record of how you ordinarily spend your time provides a good basis for planning a study schedule. A study schedule involves deciding how you can use your time best, given your particular classes, working hours and individual preferences.

It involves deciding when you will study for each of your classes and should take into account such things as your prime time for mental concentration, the difficulty of your classes, and should include time for class preparation and regular review of notes.

An established routine for studying is a good way of keeping yourself on track, keeping up with classes, and avoiding crisis management.

Of course, a study schedule is not written in stone and can be adjusted for special occasions.

For example, you might decide to use your 8-10 p.m. chemistry study session on Wednesday night to see the Wildcats and in return you would study chemistry on Friday night, which is usually a time planned for recreation.

In the final analysis, managing time for studying is not easy but it can be done. It's up to you. In The Last of the Really Great Whangdoodles, Julie Edwards writes:

"There will be many times in your lives — at school, and more particularly when you are grown up — when people will distract or divert you from what needs to be done. You may even welcome the distraction. But if you use it as an excuse for not doing what you're supposed to do, you can blame no one but yourself. If you truly wish to accomplish something, you should allow nothing to stop you, and chances are you'll succeed."

If you would like help in planning a study schedule or further ideas for managing time for studies, consider enrolling in the one-hour Learning Skills Workshops or in The Master Student Course. You may register for those programs in 201 Frazee Hall. Individual counseling also is available.

Students who wish to address these issues can come by the UK Counseling and Testing Center, 301 Frazee Hall or call, 257-8701.

If you have a problem you would like addressed, write to "Counselor's Corner," 301 Frazee Hall, UK, Lexington, KY, 40506-0031.

Both Koss and Burkhardt found more than half the women surveyed said they had experienced some form of sexual aggression at some time in their life. Also both found that more than 12 percent of the women surveyed said they had been forced to have sex against their will.

In a 1985 study of nearly 7,000 students from 32 campuses of Ms. Magazine, Koss found that one in eight women were raped.

She also found:

- One in twelve men admitted to raping or attempting to rape a woman.

- 27 percent of the women raped labeled it as rape. Forty-three percent did not admit to themselves that they had been raped.

In an article by Parade Magazine, a 1985 survey titled "Acquaintance Rape and Sexual Assault" revealed that of 408 psychology students at the University of South Dakota, 20.6 percent of 247 women said they had been raped by someone they knew.

The survey also revealed:

- 48 percent of the women surveyed said they had been sexually assaulted by men who "held, kissed, or fondled them against their will."

- 9.7 percent said they had been physically abused by men in a relationship one or more times.

- One in five females is raped and one in 10 is physically harmed due to ambiguous ground rules for dating.

- Men in the study believed "that when a dating partner says 'no' to sexual activity, she really means 'yes'."

Acquaintance rape is a continuing problem particularly on college campuses because it is at the age of 19, when women are in college, that date rape is most likely to occur.

Further complicate matters, colleges and universities traditionally avoid involvement with incidents of acquaintance rape, Karnes said.

Not only is acquaintance rape a criminal violation of Kentucky's statutory laws, it also is indirectly referred to in the University code of student conduct.

Part I of the code of student conduct, Article I, section 1.21 letter e of the University Judicial System, says, "The threat or commission of physical violence against any person present on

"Just because it's not in black and white doesn't mean that it's not happening. I have no doubt that (date rape) is happening at UK."

Paulett Powell, counselor

University property," is punishable under disciplinary offenses.

"Some people feel the code of conduct covers (acquaintance rape) and some people would probably want that spelled out more," Karnes said. "There are several variables; if it happens in residence halls it is one thing and if it happens off campus it is something else."

UK will be addressing date rape today in a luncheon lecture and discussion from 11:30 to 1 p.m. in 115 Student Center. Pam Reimer, director of UK's Counseling Psychology Services Clinic, will lead the discussion and talk.

A live video teleconference seminar on Acquaintance/Date Rape prevention will be held Thursday, Feb. 2, from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the Old Student Center Theatre.

Telephone questions and comments from UK and other participating organizations will be answered by Burkhardt and Claire Walsh, director of the University of Florida's Sexual Assault Recovery Service, and participants.

The conference will focus on the problem of acquaintance rape on college campuses, how it affects the institution and students, and what organizational actions should be taken.

The program is sponsored by UK's Dean of Students office, the office of residence life in conjunction with the University of Georgia's Center for Continuing Education and the National Teleconference Network.

To participate in the program contact Jake Karnes at 257-2754 by Jan. 25.

For the next two days, the Kentucky Kernel will examine the problem of date rape, nationally, and at UK.

Day 2 — The emotional scars attached to date rape are made worse by a society that does not yet understand, and is insensitive to rape and its victims.

The series will look at how counselors at UK deal with the problem of date rape, and why it's a crime that people and victims won't talk about.

The series will look at where date rape victims can go for help with the trauma that follows date rape.

"Our culture says the woman should be in control of sexual relationships. If you get raped, then it's your fault. You must have done something to incite it."

Remer said. In addition, the series will provide an account of an actual date rape incident. And it will look at how the victim got help.

I remember him leading me into my bedroom and then all of the sudden I was just... I remember being really scared, and I remember shaking a whole lot and just trembling from fear and being really scared and then him telling me that I'd better enjoy it because this is... He was telling me that this is what I wanted, of course.

Day 3 — The biggest problem associated with date rape is that society knows little about it. The series will look at UK and the Lexington community educate people about date rape.

"Just because it's not in black and white doesn't mean that it's not happening," according to Paulett Powell, a therapist at UK's Mental Health Clinic, which counsels rape victims. "I have no doubt that (date rape) is happening at UK."

The series also will look at how education programs at UK might not be doing enough.

Current programs dealing with date rape only are presented when a residence hall, fraternity or sorority requests them, according to Karnes. Attendance usually is very small.

"I think the University needs to do much more education and consciousness-raising," said Laura Drew, community education specialist at the rape crisis center.

er of beer, mulling over the events of the past 36 hours and not quite ready to call it a day yet.

John and I had driven all Thursday night, and by the time we got off the subway in Washington D.C. about 10 that morning, it was apparent that we were into something. Something big.

After making it through the complicated but strangely lax security checks, we headed for our seats in Blue Section 11.

Things were getting intense. We were on the capitol grounds. We were almost close enough to make out the men who would soon hold two of the most powerful — or potentially most powerful — offices in the world.

I wanted to get a better view to take some pictures, so I edged up through the crowd to see if I could. It was tentative going at first, but I soon realized that most of the people in that particular section were good politicians, used to taking orders and following them to the letter.

It worked. For that brief moment, I felt good.

Confident and unafraid. Sure that I was on top of the situation.

Then I ran out of film.

That was it. Aside from my immediate problems, a rather large man in front of us failed to see the humor John did in Billy Graham's invocation, or Bush's inauguration speech for that matter, and was giving us terribly nasty looks. I mentally identified him as a threat, and had long before told myself that if I couldn't lie John out of a dangerous situation in a matter of seconds, he was on his own.

Meanwhile, I gave Sean my reporter's notebook and worked the crowd a little — much to everyone's annoyance — trying to find someone who knew something about the camera I had just broken.

Was a bust. I decided that the thing to do was let Bush finish his bit and run out and find some batteries, film and someone who knew something about the advanced optical equipment.

Bush finished, and as the national anthem was being sung, we headed out.

It was terribly slow going as most of the people we ran into were appalled by our lack of patriotism and the rest just as unsure as we were about leaving.

Then hell broke loose. The crowd headed for a trampled snow gate and people — all types of people — began hopping down a four-foot wall, all urged on by a man who appeared to be either a street person or a secret service agent deep under cover.

I started scurrying in a direction that I was sure would bring us film.

It was useless. Every turn we made ran us into a wall of some sort or other or a street we couldn't cross.

Soon, Sean took over. We eventually found a street vendor selling beer, so I insisted we relax and regroup.

We then wound our way downtown away from the festivities of the day, and from where we were you wouldn't know that just a couple blocks away people were celebrating another page in America's history books. The people around us just wanted to get on with their day.

It was depressing, so John and I dropped Sean off at his office and we headed toward the inaugural parade.

Which, as it turned out, was even more depressing.

We caught a glimpse of the Kentucky section of the parade. The Corbin High School band marched by us: drummers trying to keep a beat, winds trying to stay in step and tune, blissing young majorettes trying to look spunky, professional and patriotic.

They did a good job of it.

But they also looked cold, and tired, and like they might be thinking more about loved ones back home, or the parties they'd have in the hotel that night.

Tired and fading fast, we made our way up Pennsylvania Avenue, against the parade route, watching people get excited over appropriate films, tuning in on bits of conversations; dodging the people selling shirts, buttons and other sort of mementos; marvelling at the amount of out-and-out garbage — newspapers, food wrappers, unwrapped food, urine from the portable Don's Johns — that had been amassing for the past nine hours or so.

Toward the very end of the parade route, we saw the Wyoming clogger float. Boys and girls, adolescents, men and women of all ages clogging away to the delight of themselves, if not the unfocused fascination of the crowd.

The cloggers were proud, and happy, and clogging like mad. And, possibly, unaware of how long the parade route actually was. Or how the wind chill factor on Pennsylvania Avenue would affect them in the next couple of hours.

But that was down the road. They waved to us. I waved back.

We went our separate ways.

John's at the wheel of the Nissan as we hold it at about 70 along I-79 south about 100 miles north of Charleston. John's tired and wondering when I'm going to finish this thing.

We hit the road around six this morning, about 48 hours to the minute from when we landed.

AM radio is keeping us company again as we drive into some shopping center where John can buy a Coke and take off his coat. I've got a terrible fuz in my mouth and buzzing in my head. I wonder how long they've been there.

All told, I guess, I still can't sort it out in my head. What this inauguration was about. It certainly wasn't about a man. The presidency is not a man. But I'm not so sure it's strictly about ideas either. The circus atmosphere pitted against the fairly desperate day-to-day life of Washington made for an interesting paradox, if not a useful metaphor.

Like I said, I don't know. I guess it's just about some need to celebrate something. To believe there's something to hold on to, to look up to, to trust, to distrust, to blame, to congratulate. And as I head back toward my own day-to-day trials and tribulations in Lexington, I suppose the whole thing is slightly — ever so slightly — comforting.
