THE SKILLED LABOR PROBLEM

Continuously advancing prosperity in the United States has given rise to a new problem within the ranks of industry - a shortage of skilled labor. Employers are finding no end of difficulty in securing the necessary trained workers to keep their factories in operation with the efficiency that modern supply and demand require.

To get a true conception of the causes of this scarcity of skilled labor one must go back to the introduction of the machine in the 80's. The wholesale displacement of skilled labor which followed in its wake alarmed workers and gave rise to a belief that the time was not far distant when skill would be no longer necessary in industry, a belief that became universal by the rapid development of the machine, and of mass production and scientific management. It was rightly contended by the advocates of progress that by lessening production costs the machine would reduce prices.

In the early age of the machine, craftsmen were displaced by the hundreds. We lost sight of the most significant fact that the whole basis of industry rests on quality and craftsmanship, and that the very nature of industry precludes the possibility of mass production ever becoming the rule. It was not realized that, whilst some products can be mass-produced, even in mass production factories there is always a variety of individual key jobs requiring the highest degree of skill.

It was never generally expected by economists and industrialists that mass production would produce new, and equally skilled, types of craftsmen, least of all was it realized that mass production itself demands a continuous supply of properly trained skilled craftsmen, and that the number required would tend to increase with the expansion of mass production.

To alleviate the increasing shortage of skilled labor which industry unwittingly created for itself, the United States has advanced along the line of vocational education. For years past the tendency has been to place youths in soft clerical occupations rather than encourage them to undertake the hazards of a mechanic's or a craftsman's career, and most lads acquired, not because the art of engineering has lost any of its glamour, but because the trade offers so few advantages. One can hardly expect lads who have been brought up by indulgent parents in an atmosphere of theatres, tennis-courts, and dance-halls to go to the trouble of learning the intricacies of craft and entering an industry which will return them at best, a precarious living.

By increasing wages, shortening hours, improving factory conditions, and establishing interesting schools of vocational education and making them mandatory, industry will have gone a long way toward relieving itself of its latest nemesis.

NEWSPAPERS HAVE IMPROVED

Looking backward is sometimes just as enjoyable and equally as profitable as looking forward. Especially is this true when one has accomplished admirable and noteworthy achievements. The Fourth Estate is looking backward - not over the past twelve months, but over the comparatively recent advances made in the journalism profession.

We say "profession," for today it is recognized as such, equal to that of law, medicine, or the ministry.

As to editorials, in which phase we have stepped forward considerably, the change has been from the ponderous, dull, metaphysical essay to the sprightly, pertinent, and comprehensible type. They have altered their style, subject matter, and treatment. The appeal is now to all persons, not only to those of higher education. Specialization, as in all other fields, has entered even into various channels of newspaper work. Editorial writers meet in a group to discuss, assign, and study their own articles. Editorials are now written to the people, not over them.

Newspaper style has become not that of the organ itself, but of its men. Dictatorial spirit is no longer the keynote, but individualistic development and self-teaching have taken its place. The reporter's position has been improved. At last, has come the realization that the reporter is not the under-dog, but an all-important cog in the wheel.

A compliment paid newspapers currently was its use as the judge for annual spelling contests in the states of Minnesota and Iowa. This is evidence of its improvement in spelling, grammar, and diction.

As a logical and forthright vindication of journalistic influence (in view of the recent election), we quote the comment of J. David Stern of Stern newspapers: "My advice to the conservative newspaper publishers of this country is to pay more attention to your reporters and sub-editors. Seventy-five per cent of the newspaper workers were for Roosevelt. They wrote the other way because their publishers ordered it. Naturally their heart was not in the task and they did not do a good job. If publishers would listen more to reporters than to bankers, they would publish better newspapers."

The Fourth Estate is proud of itself and the men and women who have contributed to its advancement!

THEO-RIES

There must be something definitely WRONG with an educational system which allows things like EXAMS to go on and on and on... Since exams only result in FRESHMEN getting hysterical, SOPHOMORES getting drunk, JUNIORS getting piliated, and SENIORS getting childish... there must be something definitely WRONG!

THINGS WE COULD NOT DO WITHOUT:

- 1. Swing music. 2. Thanksgiving vacation, Christmas vacation, Spring vacation, any vacation. 3. Pictures like "Winterset". 4. Sweet nothings whispered in your ear. 5. Men like F. D. R.

UNIVERSITIES:

The Campustev - Any event is an occasion and an excuse for him to go on a binge... He things he's still living in the prohibition days, when to be inebriated was to be smart... Some day he'll grow up and realize that only adolescents overestimate their fluid capacity... His idea of a wise gag is "Boy, I can't remember a thing! Did I get married or smack a cop?"... He likes to use words like tanked, piliated, lit, high, under-the-influence, and blotto to describe his condition... To impress a gal he raves on about his past escapades, and what he said to the chaperone, and how he woke up in the wrong room... and wonders why she doesn't look interested... He's "flaming youth" himself - the only trouble is that he went out of date a long, long time ago, when coltich kids started growing up... and thank goo'ness for that!

This Campus and That World

By RALPH E. JOHNSON "Maybe It's B. O. We've Got!"

"Dear Mr. Johnson: "It has often been my intention to write you concerning remarks you have made in your column 'This Campus and That World,' but due either to the traditional laziness of the Southerner, to the fact that I am opposed to writing crank notes, or to the fact that I did not consider the source of these remarks worthy of notice, I have desisted. That is, until now. A statement made in your first column of the New Year has moved me to write to you at last.

"Say you, Mr. Johnson, of this city during the holidays... Lexington - it was dead. By the way, I assume that you mean it suffered from a lack of social activity. My dear sir, Lexington is not dead; you are! It may be of some interest to you to note that I and some two hundred other young Lexingtonians of a certain social group were guests at six invitational balls during the weeks comprising the Christmas holidays and that besides this there were a number of private dinners, egg-nog parties, teas, and so forth, not to mention the subscription dances to which anyone with a dinner jacket and the price of admission could go. Lexington very definitely was not dead.

"One mistake conception arises, no doubt, as a result of the fact that you are not socially accepted in this city. You do not have to be. In your writings you have shown your contempt of all that is southern. This conduct probably is correct in the North, but 'down here' we do not make a practice of insulting our hosts. Those who disparage our traditions should not expect a welcome from us. Your attitude in the Negro question shows a remarkable lack of perception and ignorance of the social and political status of the South, and is but one of the many amazing things you have published. Frankly, Mr. Johnson, neither you nor your column belong before the Mason-Dixon line.

"As long as you continue your tactics, rude behavior," Mr. Johnson, Lexington will remain 'dead' for you.

"Respectfully yours, VAN DELEN IRVINE."

Dear Mr. Irvine: Where's your gallantry? Have you no respect for the "dead"? Sincerely yours, RALPH JOHNSON.

Contemplation on the possibility of the eventual destruction of all mankind is eye-opening, astounding, terrifying! Time being an eternity, ticks on, second followed by second, each of them bringing a probable destruction down on us. For some persons destruction is sudden - those who whirl along the highway at unthinking speeds, those who have the misfortune to plummet from the sky as an airplane loses its way in the heavens. Others meet destruction only in a natural death, but it is predicted that there will be a day when "Gabriel blows his horn" when we will all die off like moths in a flame.

I don't hold that it is necessarily so that we will all meet death at the same time. I don't mean that this will come in our life time, but that mankind may meet this fate to face sometime - perhaps a million years from now is million of our years, but only seconds of the kind of time that is eternal - that "relative" kind of time.

Some say that the next voyage of this earth will be by an all-consuming fire (the first fire food). This prophecy may be fulfilled, for astronomers maintain that each of this universe's suns is burning away so many million years. As far as I know they can not determine an accurate cycle, for records do not endure the course of time between one explosion and another. We have no record of our own sun's most recent explosion, so we do not know when it might pop again. The recent phenomenon of Nova Perseus was a result of a sun bursting. If planets belong to that sun, they were "well fone" when Nova finally subsided. Gaseous streamers millions of miles long were thrown from that sun. Should our own sun have a similar upsurge, it would take only a few minutes to suffocate us all. Our sun earth would soon smolder. It might even be returned to the sun from whence it came, but at any rate our gossie would be cooked and all life would begin anew, perhaps in an entirely different form. But definitely all of the geologic cooling, shrinking processes would have to start once more, and life arise from the single cell as time marches on.

That was by fire. A gas-head comet might zoom down on us, breaking its poisonous head to envelop us in a cloud of gas and asphyxiating gases that would quickly put us all to sleep, sleep of that everlasting kind when nothing is but space. That comet would not even be gas-filled, but it might jar us right out from under our heads. Fins - just like that.

Perhaps our whirling world might slow down and stop. Life would stop too - too, too, too, on one side and too cold on the other. Maybe the sun will burn out and leave us cold so to speak. But more interesting, perhaps, are the devices ways you can think of by which man himself will be responsible for his own end. Remember the story of Jason and the Golden Fleece? That old story might be used to illustrate a parallel situation present on earth today. Someone has seen a dragon, and among us and these very creations of ours may turn on us and destroy us. After all, they are soldiers and they will have to kill someone. We have Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin, creators of dragon-teeth soldiers out of all of us. We may very well turn and destroy ourselves. The progress man is making, of which he is most proud and least afraid, may be his undoing - sel-ouples, dancers drooling with affection and persons enraptured with rhythm. When the sliick comes out there are going to be some embarrassed studs.

Here's hoping I get Wanda Berry's snooty director at the right man this time. It is all right, Miss Berry, if we write that you have a great yearning for Bill Tracy? Del! Bud Hagler seems to have forgotten about the photo of a girl he carried in his notebook last year and is industriously turning Kitty Mahan's spare time into fair time.

If the gridiron heroes seem out of season and if they miss the headlines they were gloried with last fall, let me recommend an article which appeared in Reader's Digest (October, 1936) written with a moral by Paul Gallico and entitled, "Beware of Athlete's Head." It's enlightening truth.

Do Ann Young, a Ohio feature article, stroll into the delightful Canyote Cottage with Double F. Davis, and casually remarked to the busy Ed Muehlner, Les Heine, and their friend, "Oh, what funny looking orange juice." Well, if it was orange juice, it was funny looking.

The exemplary coach, Jean Short, requested Strouss a date with someone who doesn't think she's a fine girl. Proving that virtue is not its own reward.

In assiduous study deep in the cloisters of the Harvard Law School is the busy Ed Muehlner, who occasionally takes a minute of leisure to groan about the shortcomings of his favorite strong armed son, the Independent Combine. The IC, moved by Moore's crafty strategy, stole the political applause and laurels on the campus last year.

We enjoyed New Year's Eve with Jim Al Moore, '36, who left the Combine in command of the seemingly competent Reynolds Watkins and the party by occasionally sound political philosophy. Evidently, they disregard it, becoming original. I have lost two important offices already, the junior class president and the chief of the Student council. I would not have lost those two positions this year, unless the Lord promised to make Chet Ellsage ten years younger, immediately. Right now the Combine is as weak as Goose Goslin's arm.

Alto! it the truth.

SEEING SPORT STUFF

By JOE QUINN KERNEL SPORTS EDITOR

COACH ADOLPH RUPP'S Riflemen enjoyed an extended target practice against Creighton last Friday night in Alumni gym and from the way the boys were making buckets from all angles it began to appear that the Notre Dame game was no just criterion of their abilities.

Right from the beginning the 'Cats made it apparent that even in their position of hosts they were not going to allow the guests to do as they pleased. In so doing, they may have violated some rules of etiquette, but they certainly followed the rules, the cardinal principle of which is to hit that hoop more often than the opposition.

Kentucky marked up 16 points in almost nothing flat, while the Omaha club was getting the feel of the floor. The Jays soon got into the spirit of the occasion and once they started their long-range shooting the exhibition took on all aspects of a ball game. In fact the local lads were nursing a meagre two-point lead at the intermission.

When the squads came back from the locker rooms, however, Kentucky immediately set out to prove just how hard they are to beat in their own playground and it was not long before they put the contest in the Frigidaire. The Wildcats stayed in command of the battle by such a margin that the edge was taken off the customers' interest in the last period.

Starting this week, the boys in Blue start the swing around the circuit which will take them in a couple of weeks from Michigan to Louisiana and way stations. The Ruppmen open their Cook's tour against Michigan State, Thursday night, at East Lansing and then drop into Cincinnati for an engagement with Akron University on Saturday evening. The latter game is part of the double bill which has Xavier facing Butler University in the opening act.

Local customers won't see the squad in action again until January 23, when Tennessee comes here for an important conference clash. The following week will find the Wildcats up against some stiff opposition from the semester exams and those who survive will take up the trail again in a southerly direction.

INTRAMURAL

PHI EPSILON PHI TO MEET

By HILLY EVANS The second total point reported by the Intramural Department showed little change in the positions occupied by the leading fraternities. With the intramural sports program nearing its halfway point for the year 1936-37, the S. A. E.'s are in first place with a total of 469 points. They are followed by the Sigma Chi and the Phi Taus who have 440 and 395 points, respectively.

The difference between the second and third place groups has altered little since the completion of the fall sports, although the S. A. E.'s have faltered a bit and have lost some of their earlier commanding lead.

The total point count is as follows:

S. A. E.'s, 469; Sigma Chi, 440; Phi Kappa Tau, 395; Alpha Gamma Delta, 385; Kappa Sigma, 179; Phi Delta Theta, 153; Delta Tau Delta, 152; Sigma Phi Epsilon, 141; Kappa Alpha, 82; Alpha Tau Omega, 82; Triangles, 77; Lambda Chi Alpha, 73; Sigma Nu, 49; Delta Chi, 47; Phi Sigma Kappa, 44; Alpha Sigma Phi, 42; and Pi Kappa Alpha, 34.

These points will become official ten days after their posting unless protested by the intramural manager of any group.

SECOND ART SERIES EXHIBITED

The second in a series of Living American Art exhibits is now on display in the hall of the Art Center. The foremost American artists have been submitting their pictures to a small jury of distinguished artists and art critics assisted by an advisory board. These pictures are issued every three months. The original paintings are worth approximately $100,000.

meeting Vanderbilt, Alabama, and Tulane in succession. Although Kentucky teams have established for themselves the reputation of being somewhat unfortunate on the road, they should plow through this schedule without too much difficulty.

Michigan State and Akron should provide the main opposition and the 'Cats have already earned one verdict over the Staters. We'd say that by the time the Kentuckys returned home they should still have but one blot in their record, and that they have already suffered.
