Cards designed by pediatric patients benefit children's telethon

By Tamara Caskey Contributing Writer

Although the holiday season is just beginning, the pediatric patients at the UK Hospital have been busy for months designing holiday cards that benefit the UK Children's Hospital Fund.

This is the fifth consecutive year that patients have designed the holiday cards to sell to the public.

The cards are one of the may projects to raise money for the Children's Miracle Network telethon, which benefits the pediatric pro-

Jones optimistic about prospects for ethics and health-care reform

Associated Press

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Gov. Brereton Jones is taking pride in the things he has accomplished during his initial year in office and remains upheat about prospects for ethics and health-care reform in the year ahead.

and health-care reform in the year ahead.

"If you'll recall, in the campaign I said I wanted to change the way state government operated and change the expectations people have for government," Jones said. "The state has made many changes. I feel exceptionally good about success in that area."

But there have been rough spots during Jones' first year as Kenteky's chief executive, including:

"Efforts to retire a $1.6 million campaign debt left over from his successful 1987 campaign for lieutenant governor after assuming the governorship.

"The appointment of his chief fund-raiser, Jack Hall, to a government post in October.
"An effort to award his top cabinet appointees a 5 percent salary increase during a time of fiscal crisis after rank-and-file employees were denied a raise. That move was rescinded.
"The Transportation Cabinet's denied a raise. That move was re-scinded.

The Transportation Cabinet's hiring of a man who worked for Jones at his Woodford County thor-oughbred farm. The farm worker re-ceived a $33,000-per-year position even though a hiring freeze is sup-posed to be in place. Another Jones farm worker was also hired as a maintenance man and then promoted to foreman on a highway depart-ment crew.

•An ongoing rederal investigation that led to the indictment of present and former lawmakers. No one in Jones' administration is believed to be a target in the probe, however.
•A near-fatal helicopter crash in August.

•Tension with news organizations that Jones says create conflicts where none exist.

In fact, Jones blames many per-ception problems about his admin-istration on the news media, who "create news." "Tve unit worming."

worrying about the first six months,"

The administration is also trying to put its own spin on things before reporters intervene. He has begun regular radio interviews, will appear monthly on Kentucky Educational Television starting in December and the administration is producing a year-end report on Jones' accomplishments.

Jones believes he can change the way state government operates, despite sometimes depressing money problems. And he's committed to overhauling the state's health-care system, perhaps during a special gislative session in January.

"Kentucky is much farther advanced on this issue than the federal government is," Jones said during a recent interview with The Kentucky Post. "We need to develop a blue-print to give to President Citinton."

Jones has stressed ethics in government, even though critics maintain he often says one thing and does another.

does another.

He cited a campaign pledge, which he subsequently carried out, to sign a new ethics code for the executive branch within a minute of taking the oath. He also claimed credit for a wide-ranging campaign reform law adopted by the 1992 General Assembly.

What emerged was a law that provides partial public financing for gubernatorial-licutenant govern-or campaigns. That change became possible, Jones said, only after he persuaded House Speaker Don Blandford (D-Philpot) to "change his mind" and support the legisla-tion.

Jones originally hoped the 1992 General Assembly would produce ethics reform for the executive and legislative branches, but "it didn't work out that way." Now, he said, the federal probe of government corruption is affecting action on the task force proposal, and he urges lawmakers to "get in and get it done."

Jones said he will convene a spe-cial legislative session to adopt eth-ics reform measures as soon as House and Senate leaders indicate they are prepared to do so, perhaps as early as this coming month.

The Jones administration also is concentrating on formulating a comprehensive health-care package after what Jones admits was a false start.

Comedian Charles Fleischer's stand-up act more than voices

By Lance Williams

Comedian Charles Fleischer wasn't born a comic. As he points out, it takes more practice than natural ability.

"Like most art forms, the more you do it, the better you get," said Fleischer, who got an early start on the road to comedy stardom.

"Originally, I wanted to be a doctor, but I always knew that (comedy) would be it. Even when I was a little kid, I used to do routines when I was 9 years old at camp in the summer," he said in a telephone interview.

When going before an audience, Fleischer said, he doesn't bring with him a profound message or solution for the problems of life.

When on stage, Fleischer switch-es modes and never knows where the audience may lead him during the act. Fleischer said that on any given night about 90 percent of his act is improvisation.

He said he enjoys getting in-volved with his audience during his act.

Instead, after taking a slice out of Auburn in the first round, the Cats' carving knife was dulled by the sharp offensive attack of the Louisana State Tigers.

Here's a game-by-game synopsis of how the Cats fared in Boutwell Auditorium:

Friday, Nov. 27: The third-seeded Wildeats opened against the No. 6 seed Auburn (11-18), an experienced team led by four talented seniors, including first team All-SEC middle blocker Gina Thomas. Going into UK's first-round match, UK coach Kathy DeBoer said the Cats were ready to take care of business.

The Wildeats' James Bond offerse was licensened to kill, stamming 80 kills on Aubum to win 1512, 15-7, 15-17, 15-3.

Four players — Angela Salvatore, Eurice Thomas, Krista Robinson and Melody Sobezak — scored double figures in kills. Outside hitters Molly Dreisbach and Betsie

Salvatore, the team's lone senior, was 13-for-22 with just one error or a sizzling. 545 average. She also had 10 digs and five block assists, helping hold Auburn to a measly 211 attack percentage.

Thomas, UK's first team All-SEC middle blocker, chipped in with 17 kills on 34 attempts, but committed five errors, finishing with an average of 353.

"I'm real pleased with our middles (Salvatore and Thomas,") De-Boer said. "Our middles were the difference today. Angela really responded offensively."

UK's dynamite due couldn't have done it all by themselves, though. Junior setter Jane Belanger, another first team All-SEC pick, dished out a match-high 67 assists.

The Lady Tigers captured the third game with a dramatic come-back, in which, down 15-14, they scored the last three points to win the game. The UK volleyball team, on the bubble for a home match in the first round of the NCAA Tournament, received good news last night when it received its first-round assignment — against Duke Thursday at Memorial Coliscum. UK (24-8), ranked No. 16 in the American Volleyball Coaches Association Poll, will face Atlantic Coast Conference champion Duke (26-44), which lost to UK 10-15, 15-5, 15-10, 15-13 on Oct. 9 in Lexington.

Student tickets moving quickly

Staff reports

The beginning of UK's basketball season was important enought to bring "almost 1,000" students back to campus early for a student ticket lottery yesterday morning at Memorial Coliseum.
When the gymnasium doors opened at about 8 a.m., lines stretched down Euclid Avenue in both directions, reaching Hardee's at one end and starting up Lexingtion Avenue at the other.
Director of Administrative Services Rodney Stiles said yesterday's high turnout means that no lower arena seats remain for UK's regular season opener against Wright State Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at Rupp Arena.
Stiles said the best remaining seats for Wednesday's game are,
"approximately," in Row M in Sections 231 and 232.
The ticket situations for Saturday's Georgia Tech game and next Tuesday's Eastern Kentucky game, which also currently are being distributed, are similar.
All three games begin at 7:30 p.m. at Rupp.

LSU hit just .193 for the game and committed nine errors, while the Cats collected 22 digs and three blocks. The second game was a case of role reversal. This time, the Tigers jumped out to an early 11-6 advantage, but the Cats again mounted a Pitino sends surprise scrimmage into overtime to change schemes

Extra minutes allow Blues to completely rout Whites

By Graham Shelby Senior Staff Writer

UK basketball coach Rick Pitino is known as a man who can work the clock.
In Saturday's intrasquad scrimmage, he went one step further.
With 3:44 shining on the Memorial Coliseum clock and the blue team leading 102-57, UK coach Rick Pitino called time-out.

Literally. y. scoreboard cataloguing The scoreboard cataloguing UK's final preseason scrimmage returned to 0-0, and the clock was returned to 0-0, and the clock was reset to 10 minutes.

Pitino said he wanted to change the offensive style for the last few minutes and give the teams a chance to work in a slower half-court set, as opposed to the frantic rapid-fire pace of the game's first 36 minutes.

"I wanted to get a little half-court ork without the press," Pitino

The Blues won the mini-game 17-10.

The Blues won the mini-game 17-10. As in previous scrimmages, the victorious Blue team featured projected starters Travis Ford, Rodney Dent, Jamal Mashburn, Rodrick Rhodes and Dale Brown. The latter three combined for 91 points in an afternoon game that looked like a cross between a track meet, a dunking contest and a game of horse. The Blue team poured in three pointers, continuing UK's preseason sharpshooting by landing 18-01-25 (72 percent) from long range. Rhodes, a freshman, was 4-of-4 be-led a White team that managed to shoot 7-of-15 (46 percent) from three-point distance. Both teams scooted up and down the Memorial Coliseum floor, hurling long passes, diving for loose balls and trying to be the first one down for an open slam. Dent's long, lean arm frequently proruded above the fray to plunge ball through the strings on the way to his 23 points and game-high 13 rebounds. Mashburn, Brown, Brad-ky, Riddick and Rhodes also got in the act, to the delight of the generally quiet 4.500 who endured the post-Thanksgiving chill to watch UK's final preseason tune-up.

After last week's 119-84 exhibition stampede over the Ukraine National Team, several players said after the game that they thought the intrasquad scrimmages were more productive.

"I think we get after each other better in the Blue-White scrimmag-es," Brown said.

Pitino also said that because of the rigorous schedule the exhibition teams adhere to, "we actually get more out of intrasquad scrimmages than we do these (exhibition) games."

The five newcomers need to fo-cus less on crowd-pleasing and more on learning UK's system, he said, not that they aren't trying.

"They've done the best that they could in a limited amount of time ... They're certainly giving everything they have." Nevertheless, the fourth-year coach added, "we're still a little green."

After giving the team the day off yesterday, Pitino will have two days to ripen the Wildcats for their 7:30 Wednesday-night opener against Wright State in Rupp Arena.

ways to lure more doctors to the backwoods.

Of particular concern is the fact that far fewer rural doctors deliver babies. Like nearly half of Kentucky's counties, Clinton County has no doctor to care for a pregnant woman and deliver her baby.

So when Stockton, 20, became pregnant last year, she and her husband faced the struggle of finding a doctor who would take them, then figuring out how to get there.

She was rejected by one doctor in Somerset — more than 50 miles away — because she was on Medicaid, which pays less than private insurance. She was finally accepted by a physician in neighboring Cumberland County, a 45-minute drive.

The couple logged about 2,000 miles going for prenatal checkups before their daughter, Kylee, was born last summer.

Family doctors once provided most obsterrical care in rural communities. But by 1986, three out of every five family doctors in Kentucky who had provided obsterrica during the previous eight years had quit doing so, according to a survey by the University of Louisville. Another one in five had reduced their obstetrical practice. obstetrical practice.

Jones also wants to require educa-tional experiences in rural areas and has suggested that government loans might be forgiven for health professionals who set up in under-served areas.

While these programs have helped, few of the doctors wind up staying in rural areas.

About half of the foreign doctors stay in eastern Kentucky after the required two years. But only about one-fourth stay permanently, said Don Bucker, director of the UK's Physician Placement Service.

Lois Baker, executive director of Mountain Comprehensive Care in Whitesburg, is convinced that the answer for rural areas is to "grow your own,"

After recruiting more than a dozen doctors from other areas, only to see them leave, Baker started focusing on Letcher County natives.

She has been successful so far. Dr. Van Breeding, the chinic's medical director, was a patient there as a child and worked in the lab in his teens. Melissa Newell, a nurse who trained as a nurse-midwife, also grew up in the area.

Now I'm in college, and my life is very different. I still get straight As, but so do lots of other people. And, even though I was really good in sports in high school, there are so many guys here who are so much better than me that I don't stand a chance.

My friends say to loosen up and be glad I'm not flunking out. I think that if I can't be the best, then I have failed and there is no point in even trying. Nobody remembers a runner up.

How can I get back on top again?

Dear Frank.

Dear Frank.

Setting high standards for yourself and wanting to be the best you can be are very positive goals.

There is nothing wrong with striving to meet high standards — unliess those standards are beyond reach or reason.

reach or reason.

When goals dominate your life and take away your ability to enjoy your accomplishments, you can become a victim of perfectionism. Perfectionists exist in textbooks. Perfectionists exist in lexiflosors. People have perfectionistic attitudes that make them unhappy and dissai-isfied with their lives. Research has shown that people who never allow themselves to enjoy their successes appear to be vulnerable to a variety of emotional and physical ills.

Mood Clinic has developed a struc-tured treatment program for atti-tude-tertaining. Officials there sug-gest six steps for changing old habits of thought:

Make a list of the advantages and disadvantages of attempting to be perfect in everything you do Sometimes the amount of time and energy required to achieve a perfect result outweighs the importance of the results.

the results.

Start a pleasure-predicting sheet.

Make a list of your activities for the next day and assign each a number from one to 10, according to your expectation of how satisfying the activity will be.

You could discover that doing an average job on some activities is more satisfying than doing a perfect job on others.

•Find out if dichotomous thinking Find out if dichotomous unmany works. Next time you pass a person on the street, ask yourself. "Is this person totally handsome? Or total-ly ugly? Or somewhere in he-tween?" The world seldom divides itself dichotomously into two categories.

-Write down your "automatic thoughts." Make a list of the thoughts that rush into your mind involuntarily when you evaluate yourself.

Did you record a lot of negative thoughts.—"This paper isn't good crough to turn in. I'm an irresponsible person Pecause 1 didn't do my best."

ever, but it is on time and parts of it are very good. You may find you are jumping to conclusions that aren't supported by the facts.

Learn to respond to criticism by using "werbal judo" Several tech-niques are useful. One is empathy, or learning to see the world through the critic's eyes instead of respond-ing defensively.

ing defensively.

Another is inquiry. When the criticism is vague, ask the critic to respond in a more specific and objective way — "Just what did I do that you felt was stupid."

A third technique is disarming the idea is to take the sting out of the criticism by finding a grain of truth in the criticism, even if it seems unfair and untrue.

seems untair and untrue.

-Learn to celebrate smaller goals.

Try adjusting your standards. Standards can be thought of as imaginary abstractions people create to motivate themselves. Experiment with various standards to see which work out best.

In any given activity you could am for "perfect," "good." "above average," "kevrage," "helow aver-age" or "adequate." If your time is limited, you may decide to do a "perfect" math paper and opt for an "average" room cleaning.

particular event is in the total pic-ture of your life. Make adjustments in your goals and act on them.

Only you can decide if being "the best" in something is what will make you happy.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.
