A Sadly Tamed Kitten

Life, Liberty, and Pursuit

By Adele Demman
LIFE: It is much easier to get the vets out of the navy than it is to get the navy out of the vets. The other day some students were gathered about a man-hole beside Miller hall. The object of their scrutiny was a vet, obviously not long removed from submarine service, who was standing down in said hole. Several of the students screamed at him to come out, and one boy said, "Surface you darn seahorse; just send up your periscope and you can see that you are late for class."

The football fans were going wild, as the game reached its peak. Suddenly the ball was snapped and the lines crashed together. There was a hush, and a stream of profanity drifted menacingly near to the ears of the crowd—500 members of the Lily-white League fainting. Now the problem is "who was the member of the football team who did this damage in the Georgia game?" Believe it or not, but so help me it is true. Two elderly ladies (names must be withheld) were watching the daily milking of the hockey class to the playing field, which is the very embarrassing procedure of dashing two blocks across campus in gym suits. These ladies, ardent critics of the University, were heard to say, "That is a true example of the dangers of progressive education. Just look at those poor children. Their glasses are held so early in the morning that they don't even have enough time to dress."

INTRODUCTION OF THE WEEK: Perhaps you would like to have charge of arranging the time and date for every formal and informal social event on the campus? Making arrangements and keeping the unending chain of social events from conflicting, is an everyday occurrence for Mrs. Dorothy Evans. This rigorous young woman may be seen dashing about the Union any day in the week trying to prevent a sorority open house, a Union dance, a "T" party, and a pep rally from being held at the same time. Dot is good on advice too. So if you are interested in obtaining some progressive tips on how to be a BWOC (big woman on the campus) just see her—if you can catch her.

LIBERTY: "I've still got my honor, but my social life is in a heck of a mess."
This statement might be a quote from most any Boyd hall girl. They have been placed on the honor system, requiring them to swear on everything but their grandmother's false teeth, that they will not go anywhere except the library on week nights. We will be forced to admit that the library is quiet and overflowing with references, but the prospect of a steady diet of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and the New World Atlas is not greatly exciting to an eager college girl.

ORCHIDS to the Sigma Chi's for the first serenade of the season. Those boys really can sing, and if you think we don't appreciate it, you are mistaken. The old girls had a few tears falling off their chins, and the new girls couldn't close their mouths.

PURSUIT: This week seems to have produced more involved squares than triangles. Take the Carolyn Stevens, Lu Winterspoon, Nancy Kimbrough, and Billy Settlemeyer affair first.

The Fourth French Republic came into official existence this week when approximately 24,000,000 French voters agreed to change the old constitution and to retain the De Gaulle government while drafting a new order for a new France.

Among the quarter of a billion voters were 13,000,000 women who voted for the first time in the history of the French Republic. This step, while not the most dramatic one to be taken in the name of democracy, rates high as one of the best ways to insure equality. The voting privilege is one of the first ways to show the people and the world that France means business when it comes to an "old people" form of representation.

It is interesting to note that among the candidates for seats in the government were former premier, Edouard Herriot, who was Deladier, and the time France went to war.

The returned veteran and released prisoner camp was played up considerably during the elections with many of the candidates using as their campaign slogans the phrases "deported by Vichy" or "returned from Dachau." Reminiscence of the elections in the United States and the slogans "I was at Bataan" or "let the man who saved totalitarian government at its worst tell you about democracy at its best."

These are just a few sidelights on the elections in the new France. The world will be watching to see if the country whose freedom had its start, can keep that torch burning with the De Gaulle provisional government.

Should Army and Navy Merge? The merging of the Army and Navy is still one of the most talked of problems in national circles this week, with General Marshall speaking out strongly in favor of the idea. It certainly merits a great deal of attention, and a lot of time, money and energy are being wasted while nothing seems to be done about it.

Several arguments against such a move run along the lines that the world would go so long for the entire personnel of the armed forces to become acclimated to such a decision. That argument is rather thin when you think that the only vital change will be in the leadership. The Army will remain as is, as will the Navy, and the Air forces. The offices of the admirals and the generals will be the only ones really affected by the change.

There will be a central military planning board made up of officers of the Navy, the Army and the Air forces. The central organization will work on a combined operation basis with the armed forces divided into the ground, sea and air wings. The uniforms will remain relatively the same as will the ranks and offices. The great advantage of such a merger far surpasses the amount of work necessary to complete the deal, and when the details are tabulated there is no comparison with the merits.

With the Hitler regime and the Rising Sun apparently erased from the books of Fascism, there remains but two black spots on the roll, the Franco government in Spain, and the Peron gang in Argentina. The state department has received great criticism about the continuance of diplomatic relations with Fascist Spain. As a matter of fact, these relations have not been complete nor harmonious in the past months.

There are instances when it pays to reserve decisions, when time is needed to build up enough power to stamp out resistance, and in the case of Spain that statement is certainly true.

When the fighting in North Africa broke out between the British and the Germans it was evident that in order to send aid to the Allies we would have to have a way into the ports of North Africa. If diplomatic relations with Spain were broken then the American fleet might never have been able to render such aid because the only route through to the Mediterranean was by the Straits of Gibraltar which could have been sealed by Spain at any time in an emergency. Of course, the fortress on the rock was a mighty power, but it would have been a costly campaign and an excellent delaying action for the forces of Fascism in Europe. Our ships might have been held up for a matter of months, which would have resulted in a British defeat in Africa and a much more costly invasion of that coast.

INTERMISSION with Red Warman

"Do strings belong to a dance orchestra or should they stick to the Philharmonic?" This off-asked question was asked during a popular dance band here by "Downbeat" in a recent issue. The results of the issue were the same as will the ranks and offices, and when the details are tabulated there is no comparison with the merits.

Gene Krupa, who was using strings, dropped them about five months ago because "the strings only increase the overhead of the band while doing nothing for the box office receipts."

Arnie Shaw, who started strings in swing bands, doesn't use them either. Russ Moran always uses strings; Jerry Wald doesn't. So you can imagine how opinion must be divided among the side men and among the people who dance or listen to the music, when even the makers can't agree.

Birthplace of
50,000 RADARS

TWO years before Pearl Harbor the Government asked Bell Telephone Laboratories to help perfect radar as a military instrument. The Bell System, through the Western Electric Company, its manufacturing branch, became the nation's largest supplier of radar systems.

Bell scientists designed and developed many different types of radars—each for a specific job. One particular type was standard for B-29s in the Pacific for navigation, target location and high altitude bombing. Another directed all Navy guns over five inches.

This is not surprising, for radar development and production stem from the same roots that produced and continue to nourish this country's telephone system.

What's Wrong, Wildcats?

What's wrong with the Wildcats? That is what the loyal fans who have supported UK's football team, win or lose through all these long, lean years of not very glorious gridiron seasons want to know. Every fall the Big Blue rolled out on the field the boosters kept hoping that it would be different.

The last home game against Georgia was the same old story, only much worse. Students packed the stands, ready to hark the players, but by the half they were laughing and embarrassed at the spectacle the Cats were making. Unable to take any more, many left at the half-time. Vanderbilt didn't relieve the situation. The grandstand coaches say "there is no blocking, no teamwork," or "too many players are hurt," or "they don't keep training." Freshmen say their high school teams play better ball.

In Tuesday's Courier-Journal, Sports Editor Earl Ruby took up the issue and printed letters from alumni and fans who are clamoring that something—anything—be done. "I have followed the Wildcats hopefully, though always painfully, through one football famine after another, and despite the constant derision of fellow fans heretofore. Put me down as willing and anxious to participate in any alumni or booster plan, financial or otherwise, that might bring UK a winning or respectable football team," was one plea.

Another said that the massacre of UK by Georgia made his Kentucky blood boil for the last time, and he was giving the Wildcats back to the Indians. "I am so nauseated at the sight of our Lexington lams being led to slaughter at the hands of Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee year after year that I've cancelled my reservation for the Alabama game, rather than see those Red Elephants stomp the daylight out of us again," he said.

"I would like to know why the University cannot have a football team worthy of the State of Kentucky. As an alumnus of this school I am thoroughly ashamed of the showing my school is making in competition in the Southeastern Conference. Why can't we have a team which is representative of our state and student body? is another outspoken opinion.

Now this is no time to "give the Wildcats back to the Indians," but is high time something constructive was done to bring them out of the football doldrums. The failure of a team can't be blamed on the coach. Excellent coaches have probably lost sleep over Kentucky's team and yet were unable to make it successful. It can't be blamed on individual players for they are bound to want to win. Instead of jumping on the Cats when they are down, steps should be taken to help them up.

The administration is busy with the big job of running a university and it would be understandable if they had little time to give to athletics, but this seems to be a task left for them. Football can and should be an asset and not a joke. A university's good reputation cannot be upheld by ridiculously helpless performances on the playing field.

The alumni, students, and Kentucky fans are ready and willing to support any plan to build a respectable Wildcat squad, if not a winning one: a fighting team, if not a great one. They feel that if it is more money that is needed, then money should be provided; if it's additions to the coaching staff, equipment, or more recruits for the line, they should be gotten. Given a team not to be ashamed of, students will furnish the spirit.

President Donovan has advocated a good football team for UK as he did at Eastern. Well, the time seems to have arrived for him to see what can be done—and certainly, he will be willing.

Many Kentuckians think that if it is impossible to build a commendable team, the Wildcats should withdraw from intercollegiate competition in football.

A Peculiar Species

Students are a peculiar species. No other portion of the human race is quite like the student. The average student maintains that he has come to school to become educated, but every time an opportunity for intellectual improvement comes along, the student—the average student—is in the grill, or in bed, or as far as possible from the dispenser of knowledge.

Perhaps it is the title of the event that scares the student to the nearest Coca-Cola. "Convocation," "lecture," "forum"—these are words to be shunned by the collegian.

Pep rallies, sports events, plays—all attract a majority of the thinking as well as the unthinking portion of the student body.

The fact that students of this campus do not attend convocations, lectures, and concerts prepared for their interest and education is a shame and a disgrace—a shame because so much opportunity to learn of the great theories and opinions held by men highly educated is lost to students sitting in the grill, and a disgrace that student hosts should not show courtesy to campus guests.

Since this stigma of dullness has been so firmly attached to anything extra-curricular in education, perhaps a new publicity slant on the part of the planning committee would arouse interest. Playing up the interesting points of the program might be tried, rather than merely announcing that a convocation will be held at which Dr. So-and-so, well-known authority, will be the speaker. His very prominence often presupposes dullness to the student uninterested in the subject.

One cannot blame either the administrative committee or the student body entirely. The students of the University may not realize the interesting points and persons they miss as they "don't get to convocation," and the committee in charge of lecture publicity does not realize the psychological effect of the present campus publicity. The campus campaign is too adult. The average student mind does not yet think in wide enough concepts to realize that a convocation, merely as a convocation, is interesting enough to bother to attend.—C. G.

—And Now

• here is the opportunity to see if you are one of the "peculiar species" who expect to gain an education by avoiding anything which sounds like a speech. Washington and Lee university's president, Dr. Francis P. Gaines, will be guest speaker—tonight at 7 for a SGA sponsored concert.—N. The honor system, which The Kernel has suggested might be a good plan for UK to adopt, is given as one of the topics which he will discuss. Such a widely recognized authority should have something to say worth hearing on how the system works at W & L.

Domestic Instincts Offered in Six Weeks at West Virginia U:
The home management house described in the West Va. weekly, reminds us of the one on Maxwellton court in Lexington.
Bob Hope would say, "Home Management house—that's the place where they mould the perfect wife in six weeks but forget to supply the husband." And he wouldn't be far from wrong.

Located on Willey street, the house is furnished with every device needed to instill wifely instincts, including a baby to a furnace.

Then, there is a nursery school, the theoretical purpose of which is to give the FMA's (Future Mothers of America) the opportunity to acquaint themselves with problems and methods to influence young children.

Just like old times: The Indiana U. paper editorialized thusly last week: One of the biggest triumphs in the success of Indiana University's first postwar Homecoming last week-end was the virtual elimination of rules which chimes Ball Sisters have been mischievously last year made organized campaigning in the Homecoming Queen election almost impossible.

"The whole picture of a campus actively interested in a traditional election, after a period of relative political inactivity, was certainly a concrete evidence of the important place of good politics in building that bigger force we call school spirit.

"And it seems to us that a university which, through its policies and traditions, encourages the students to take a full part in such campus activities, probably will be, in the end, the university which turns out a relatively high percentage of responsible, thinking, government-minded citizens."
These Things Will Be Heard Again: Here's good news about those things which chimes Ball Sisters had been mischievously last year made organized campaigning in the Homecoming Queen election almost impossible. ing out the quarter-hour melodious by across the campus. Wartime restrictions have been responsible for the silence of these things. When repairs were needed the material for replacement simply could not be obtained.

GENE HAAS

STILL AROUND—One of the most consistent Kentucky Wildcat linemen in 1944 was Gene Haas, 185-pound guard from Ironton, Ohio. The veteran is back in the same spot this season, and this knowledge should bring no special cheer to Cat opponents.

Introducin'

By O. C. Halvard
Gene Haas, 29-year-old blond veteran from last year's team, has been playing outstanding ball in the line this year for the Kentucky Wildcats.

Gene, one of the most dependable and hardest playing linemen at Kentucky last year improved this year from experience and upon the reputation that he made for himself last year.

Although the Army classified him 4-F because of a perforated eardrum, he appears to be anything but physically unfit, standing 5-feet 11 inches and weighing 186 pounds. As further proof of his physical fitness and capability to play top-notch football, Haas is a 40-minute man, playing a driving game all the way on offense, and an alert, protective game to the end on defense. Even though the game may seem hopelessly lost, Gene never gives up, but tries to play better and tackle harder.

A tackle in high school, Haas switched to guard when he came to Kentucky and continued his good play by helping to hold out the opposing lines, while his team mates in the backfield worked the T-formation.

From coach to Kentucky from Ironton, Ohio, where he took his preliminary football training under Coach Shirley Davies. He was captain of the high school team in his senior year, and was all-Ole mention for his outstanding play at tackle.

Vandy Beats UK In Fumble-Filled Tilt At Nashville

By Charley Taylor
After two years of informal football the Vanderbilt Commodores showed signs of coming to the front of the pack in the Southeastern conference by defeating a hapless, fumble weary eleven from the University of Kentucky at Nashville last Saturday.

Taking advantage of every mistake made by the Big Blue, an alert Vanderbilt team, coached by Doby Bartling, showed the Wildcats all over the field and, in general, was going away.

Vanderbilt scored near the close of the first quarter when Jimmy Allen intercepted one of Blanda's passes on the Kentucky 35 and ran it back to the seven. After failing to gain the Commodores were given the ball on the one-yard line because of unnecessary roughness by Kentucky. Tommy Gray, sensational speedster from Hopkinsville, hit the center of the line for the score and Vanderbilt led 6-0. The conversion was wide.

On an exchange of kicks the Wildcats found themselves in possession of the ball on the 14. Captain Roger Yost lost one yard before Chambers fumbled and Vanderbilt recovered on the 26-yard stripe.

On fourth down and four to go Allen stepped back and threw a perfect pass to Schiani who was waiting over the goal line for the Commodores' second six-points. Williams made it 13 to 0 with his kick.

Allen faked back and passed again to Malsberger for Vanderbilt's last score of the game. Williams' kick for the extra point was blocked.

'The Lowe-Down'

By Dick Lowe

Supporting a winning team or even supporting a losing team which shows fighting spirit is all a part of college tradition, but asking the student body to back a losing team that plays without the least sign of spirit is too much.

If the tamed Wildcats keep on playing with the same lack of precision and of spirit, the victory over the Cincinnati Bearcats will be the only credit on the ledger for the season.

Before the whistle started the games this year, the sports authorities stated that Kentucky was an unpredictable, but from the wealth of material out for the team, they might be the dark horse of the Southeastern Conference. The only part that reminds one of a dark horse is the covering of dust that the other teams have smattered on the Cats.

The first loss of the current season to Ole Miss was attributed to the intense heat in Tennessee. It was left at that with only one statement, "Wait until next game." Then came the non-ot impressive Cincinnati game that was won on luck as there was no blocking down the field on either touchdown. Since that game the Bearcats have improved whereas the Cats have steadily gone in the opposite direction.

An old Greek myth states that in union there is strength and everyone should be conscious of that fact since the Georgia slaughter. The entire Bulldog squad worked like a well-oiled machine. They hustled on and off the field, like trackmen, with scouring steps that left a noticeable impression in the minds of the fans as to the difference in the famous jogging act. Wally Butts started after the game that he gave his entire team an opportunity to play in order to keep the score from mounting.

The loss to Vanderbilt topped off the humiliating defeats. The Commodores had not felled a team since 1942 and in their first game with the Kittens, they won 19-6. Some of the playing on the field was so disgusting that the players on the bench turned their backs to the game and got a bigger thrill out of counting the empty seats in the stands.

If the team should happen to collaborate in one game the outcome might be different. In past games the line would open holes big enough to drive trucks through and then the backs would either fumble the ball or start so slow that the opposition would have time to close the gap. Then if that didn't happen, the backs would run into a solid wall where the line had failed to make an opening. If they should ever happen to get together, then bragging instead of excuses would be the order of the day.

If no improvement is shown by the end of next week the Alabama and Tennessee games will not be worth sitting in the cold to see.

The fellows on the team have the ability, and the size to win and therefore we haven't given up yet. Spirit seems to be the only thing lacking. I still maintain that if the spirit moved them they would play the brand of ball to be admired. Dragging the bottom of the Southeastern Conference is not good and the game with Cincinnati this week will tell the "tail" as to the apparent outcome of the season.

With both teams substituting freely, the Wildcats came to life and showed signs of playing the brand of ball that the pressmen experts had predicted. On a long pass to Jones Kentucky moved into scoring position only to fumble again. Here, the Commodores found the ball slippery and lost it back to the Cats. With a penalty putting the ball on the one-yard line, Grantz pushed it over on the next play for the Blue's lone marker. The kick was low and Vandy led 19-6.

Vanderbilt, although short on experience, showed itself to be a well-coached, gallant, and fighting outfit.

Coach Rupp

'The Baron' Is Home Now

By Bob Leach

Just lately arrived from 10 weeks of strenuous overseas service, the "baron of basketball"—Coach Adolph Rupp is hard at work putting together his 1945-46 edition of what appears to be another great basketball team.

Coach Rupp, although unable to conceal the fact that he lost 22 pounds during his stay overseas, revealed that he now has a much broader knowledge of the world and its many historical places.

While displaying the lately-punched notches in his belt the "baron" told of his travels throughout France, Germany, Belgium and Luxembourg. He also told of how he was busy engaged in the process of setting up an athletic program and a coaching clinic for members of the occupation forces. However, he managed to see more of France and Germany than most soldiers. On one occasion, he engaged a sergeant to drive into Russia with him on a sight-seeing tour.

Admitting that there was a lot of good basketball material in the occupation forces overseas, Coach Rupp explained that he was there as a commissioned officer on official business and not as a talent scout.

Following a flight from Paris to New York which took only twenty-four hours, Coach Rupp expressed a desire to catch up on his rest. Right now basketball practice is well under way down in the men's gym and Coach Rupp urges all boys with basketball talent to come in and see him. He supposes he will catch up on his sleep this winter. That is, if the boys will let him.

Blues To Meet Bearcats

By Don B. Towles

The Kentucky Wildcats will leave for Cincinnati at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning for a return engagement with the Bearcats. Kentucky defeated the Cincy squad on Stoll field 13-7, in the first meeting this year.

Kentucky, which has lost four out of five games, will be all out to defeat this supposedly weaker Bearcat team. McDonald, Kentucky's center, who suffered a broken nose in the Kentucky-Vanderbilt game last week, will be in condition to play. Jones, who has a slight ankle injury, also will be in condition to start. Although nothing definite has been decided about the Kentucky backfield, it probably will consist of Barnett, Blanda or Granita, Yost, and Tunstall.

43 Net Candidates Report For Practice

Basketball practice started Monday afternoon with 43 candidates out for the team. Coach Adolph Rupp said that this year's squad was faced with one of the hardest schedules ever played by a Kentucky team.

Four Stars Return
Four of Kentucky's starters in last year's National Collegiate basketball tournament reported for practice with the fifth expected to report as soon as football season is over. The four were Jack Tingle, Wilbur Schi, Jack Parkinson, and Bill Sturgill. The fifth is Kenton "Dutch" Campbell.

Three of these boys, Tingle, Parkinson, and Campbell, won all-Southeastern conference honors last year. Others from last year's squad who reported for practice were Buddy Parker, Singleton Yeary, and Deward Compton.

Ralph Beard, ace guard and captain of last year's Louisville Male high school state championship team, reported for practice in spite of rumors that he had left school.

Wallace "Wah Wah" Jones, six-time Harlem wonderman, will report as soon as he finishes his job with the football team.
