Do you think one vote doesn't really count? Think again. There are some compelling arguments to vote. It could decide an election. Here are a few examples:

One vote caused King Charles I of England to be beheaded in 1649.

One vote made Adolph Hitler head of the Nazi Party in Germany in 1933.

One vote changed France from a monarchy to a republic in 1875.

One vote in 1776 decided that Americans would speak English rather than German.

One vote made Texas part of the United States in 1845.

One vote saved President Andrew Johnson from impeachment in 1868.

One vote saved the Selective Service System only 12 weeks before Pearl Harbor in 1941.

One vote admitted California in 1850, Oregon in 1859 and Idaho and Washington in 1890 into the union.

One vote elected Rutherford B. Hayes to the presidency in 1877.

One vote elected Thomas Jefferson president in 1800.

One vote elected Woodrow Wilson president by carrying one state by less than one vote per precinct in 1916.

If you changed 50,000 out of 50 million votes nationwide in the 1980 U.S. Senate elections, the Democrats would have been in the majority. The Republicans ended up winning the majority with 53 out of 100 seats.

If you changed one vote in every voting location in the United States, Richard Nixon would have been elected president in 1960. John Kennedy won the election by less than 100,000 votes out of almost 64 million votes cast nationwide.

Program enriches participants lives

By Leslie Ammerman
STAFF WRITER

For the past 35 years, UK's Donovan Scholars Program has put new meaning into the term "non-traditional student."

The program, which began in 1964, is currently run through the Sanders-Brown Center on Aging. It offers a variety of educational programs for older adults such as self-enrichment programs, lectures and seminars.

At its inception, it was the first program of its kind in the nation. UK is "very proud" of it, said Judy Henselman, a registrar for the program.

The most well-known educational opportunity offered by the program is the Herman L. Donovan Senior Citizen Fellowship Program, which allows individuals over 65 to enroll in academic courses at UK without paying for them.

While only one aspect of the scholar's program, the two are often synonymous, since the fellowship program is the largest facet of the entire program, Henselman explained.

The fellowship program created a model for other universities to emulate. Numerous universities have called UK and asked for information about the program, Henselman said.

"Many schools now provide tuition-free or tuition-assisted education for older people," she added.

The program has assisted in granting a number of older students the complete range of higher education. Since it began, 40 Donovan scholars have earned 41 degrees, among them four doctorates and eight master's degrees.

While some of the scholars take the courses to earn degrees or to gain additional work skills, some of them take classes just for the mere sake of learning. Many of these students do what is known as auditing, which means that they are enrolled and registered, but they are not eligible for a grade, Henselman explained.

Elain Adland, who has been auditing political science and history course for the past couple years as a program participant, said that the program is well-known in the Lexington community. Many of her friends are already participants in the program,

"I know people who are looking forward to turning 65 so that they can participate," Adland said.

VOTING

Overcoming student apathy

By Jason Hargis
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

While numerous voter registration drives earlier in the year strove to increase the number of registered student voters, many of those who are now registered aren't sure what to do next.

Many students remain relatively uninformed when it comes to the platforms of Kentucky's gubernatorial candidates, said Chuck Ruprecht, a business sophomore.

"It's hard. They want us to vote, but a lot of students don't know where to find the information," Ruprecht said.

Penny Miller, a political science professor, said that it appears that students have not been given as much information about candidates as they have in the past.

"This lack of information is forcing some students to vote in a largely haphazard manner. I guess I'm going to vote blindly, not really knowing all of the issues each candidate is pushing,"

Ruprecht said.

Miller said that even if students are not the best informed about candidates, they should still exercise their right to vote.

"I strongly encourage students to vote. They need to be more involved," explained Miller. "It's a privilege; we should take advantage of it."

Jeff Dozier, an anthropology senior, has already chosen to vote for Reform Party candidate Gatewood Galbraith, despite the fact that many people say a vote for a third-party candidate is a wasted vote.

"I feel my vote for Gatewood will count in conjunction with other people who feel the same. We can make a difference. We can impact the state in the same way Minnesota did when they elected Jessie Ventura," Dozier said.

In addition to the gubernatorial race, elections for other offices are also being held. Miller thinks that many of the elections involving judicial offices, such as circuit court judge, will be extremely close races, possibly decided by just few votes.

"Students can make a difference in that election," Miller said. "There will be no wasted votes."

Retiring to research

Retirement sounds like heaven for a college student whose life revolves around research, deadlines, papers and exams.

But retirement for former UK professor John E. Keller did not bring a cease of writing or research. That's just the way he likes it.

In fact, retirement opened the door for even more academic work. Keller, 82, a former Spanish professor, has continued to research and write about all sorts of subjects since he retired in 1988.

"Quite a few professors, after they retire," Keller said, "decide to branch out from scholarly books into fiction, especially historical, since they have learned so much background for novels."

While his books are not meant for the silver screen, Keller's most recent book has made the spotlight. Dialy Life in the Cantigas de Santa Maria, a book Keller co-wrote with Annette Cash, a Spanish professor at Georgia State University, received the Prestigious Book Award from the South Atlantic Modern Language Association.

The association's region is made up of nine different states, including Kentucky.

"The honor for such an award is great since it means that Dialy Life won over all the scholarly books submitted by universities and colleges in this region," Keller said.

The book translates and interprets the 13th century Spanish book Cantigas de Santa Maria. Keller and Cash spent three years studying the 2,500-plus miniatures depicted in the Cantigas, then catalogued all the events into their book.

"The book is important," Keller said, "because it makes it possible for scholars, students and the general public to know how people lived, ate, made love, made war, on land and sea, faced the devil, saw angels and much, much more."

Keller said he was quite surprised by many of his findings among the miniatures while researching for Dialy Life. "Our favorite picture shows a 13th century branch out from scholarly books into fiction, especially historical, since they have learned so much background for novels."

UK guard Keith Bogans said that if he was not playing college basketball, he would be a movie star. Despite not producing in the first half of Saturday's Blue-White scrimmage at Memorial Coliseum, Bogans never stopped smiling or performing.

After missing his first six shots, three of which were three-point attempts, Bogans struck downtown and threw down a dunk off of a fast break.

Although his team got off to a sluggish start and trailed the White team 42-26, Coach Tubby Smith was not disappointed with Bogans' performance.

"I just think his team was getting beat," Smith said of Bogans' two of eight shooting. "In his high school situation he was used to taking the load and that may have been what he was thinking."

Smith also said Bogans needed no critiquing at the half and it was not his style to badger players with their faults. In fact, Bogans came out blistering in the second half without any adjustments.

"It was just a matter of finding my shot," said Bogans.

Bogans certainly achieved that. The freshman was four of ten from the field in the second half and overtime, including three out of four three-point attempts. Bogans finished the game with 18 points after only five in the first half.

Smith mixed up the teams at half-time and Bogans played with many of the first string players in the second half. Bogans said playing with senior Jamaal Magloire helped him get more open shots. The center dominated much of the game shooting 70 percent from the field and scored a game high 33 points.

"Jamaal is so good and when he drew a double team he kicked it out to me," Bogans said.

Other than getting open shots, Bogans said playing with the first string had no influence on his play.

Bogans joked with his teammates the entire game and badgered sophomore Desmond Allison on a couple occasions. When Allison was at the foul line with 14 seconds remaining in the second half, he had a chance to put his team up three. Bogans walked up to Allison and whispered something in Allison's ear.

Bogans' inconsistent performance showed the typical play of most freshman, but also showed his limitless potential. In the second half Bogans shot the ball as well as anyone on the team, but he may be even better at driving to the basket.

"I'm going to do whatever coach asks me," Bogans said of his undefined role.

Smith did not limit Bogans to any specified role, either. "I expect him to be a player on the Kentucky basketball team. That is his role," Smith continued. "I expect him to do everything."

FILM

Not your Halloween scare

By Patrick Avery
STAFF CRITIC

One of the most disappointing things in this world is when great actors and great producers get together to make a big pile of cow manure. This cow dung is a really awful horror movie plagued by worthless characters and overdone special effects. This is what's wrong with The House on Haunted Hill.

The beginning is very promising when theme-park tycoon Steven Price (Geoffrey Rush) takes reporters on a tour of his new roller coaster. His scary antics are impressive but he makes the unforgivable promise that "the fun is just beginning."

Broken promises come to fruition when the action moves to the Vanmacutt Psychiatric Institute for the Criminally Insane, known as the House on Haunted Hill. Four guests have been invited to the birthday party of Price's wife, Evelyn (Famke Janssen), at the dread- ed asylum. Watson Pritchett, played by Saturday Night Live's Chris Kattan, is the former owner's ancestor and believes the house is alive. Everyone in the group believes he is dem- ented until the house begins to live up.

Actors Taye Diggs, Peter Gallagher, Ali Larter, and Brid- gette Wilson are the lucky guests to the party. They learn that when they arrive at the house that if they stay the night they will be awarded one million dol- lars. They believe the task will be all too easy even though the crazed owner, Pritchett, insists that the house is alive.

Crazy things do start hap- pening. One by one everyone starts dying as in Agatha Christie's novel And Then There Were None. The only dif- ference here is that you wish they would all die in the quick- est possible manner.

The characters in this movie are as shallow as the baby pool I swam in when I was 5 months old. They breed as much excitement as the entire chem- istry department's lectures.

Academy Award winner Geoffrey Rush has no business being in such a disgrace of a movie. Act- ors Taye Diggs and Ali Larter are promising, but will not come close to fur- therming their careers with this movie.

Robert Zemeckis, di- rector of Forrest Gump, is the producer of this re- make of the 1958 classic of the same name. That movie started horror master Vincent Price. Ze- meckis' special effects tal- ents are wasted in the of- ten gore-filled scenes.

The ending and resolu- tion of this movie is the worst I have ever seen. Let's just say being adopted could save you if a large black monster tries to kill you. File this baby in the category of worst movies ever made.

STANDING OVATION

Steinbeck's classic takes the stage

An Actors' Guild Masterpiece: Hardesty and Johnson shine as a pair of workers struggling through the Depression

By Jim Scott
SENIOR STAFF CRITIC

Actor's Guild of Lexington's latest of- fering, John Steinbeck's Of Mice And Men, seems far too grand a spectacle to crowd into an acting space that is barely thirty-something square feet. Somebody needs to buy these folks an opera house.

Unpredictably and inexplicably, this production is massive. Is this the best live theater I have ever seen? I'm scratching my head to recall better. Steinbeck's play tells the story of agricultural ranch workers in 1937 California. It is a world of quiet desperation where hungry men labor all month only to blow their pay on brothels and alcohol. For most of the ranch hands, the cycle repeats itself monthly, worsening the des- peration for a better world. Finally, the story is about life and death. The veteran touch of Director Joe Ferrell is unmistakable here. Of Mice And Men is seamless, potent, and in- intoxicating. Arena seating usually complicates the blocking design, but the action here is in sharp focus.

In the first scene two incongruous phys- ical specimens take the stage, Kevin Har- desty as George and Robert Parks Johnson as Lennie. Steinbeck's characters will prove to be equally incongruous, and yet before this scene ends we will not be able to imagine them apart from one another.

Hardesty is impressive. His timing with Johnson is a large part of this magic. These are not two fellows on stage reciting lines. Two distinct and individual personalities are fully present. From the opening mo- ment, there is nothing plastic or implausible about these two men.

Johnson's performance is unique. The character of the simple-minded Lennie de- mands authenticity but also lends itself to stereotyping. Johnson is not just believ- able, but also unpredictable. His pacing is in- spired. We never know just where this scene is going, but we can't wait to find out.

Hardesty and Johnson have a special connection on stage, and the play is primar- ily about George and Lennie. Yet the list of quality performances is a lengthy one, and each character presents a compelling case for his or her objectives.

Charles D. Haller plays the aged, infirm ranch hand named Candy. Haller's Candy is at first little more than a cantankerous bunkhouse bum. When the deeper layers of the character come out, we find Candy's troubled life and uncertain future as en- gaging as George's and Lennie's.

Glenn Thompson is onstage only momentarily as The Boss. In those short min- utes he burns an unforgettable image into our minds. Ben Coleman plays Crooks in another strong supporting role.

Laurie Genet plays the flirtatious wife of the boss's son. Alternately coquettish and naive, Genet strikes a delicate balance be- tween the character's shady reputation and her secret desires.

Rexx Samuell is particularly distinctive as Slim. Samuell's portrayal reflects veteran savvy, despite the actor's relative youth and inexperience. This UK sophomore shows up everywhere, from student-directed one-acts to off-campus community theater and his work is always diverse. Doesn't this guy have any classes?

Robert Pickering's scene and light de- signs mesh well with Ferrell's sound design to create a variety of locales in a minimum space. From the moon-lit riverbank to the seedy bunkhouse, the various technical ele- ments add a rustic authenticity.

Actor's Guild's "Of Mice And Men" is a seasoned production brought together by a smorgasbord of experience and talent. The high quality of Steinbeck's script is the final ingredient in the creation of some- thing very special. This production is spe- cial and then some.

FEAR AND LOATHING IN PHOENIX

Believe in life after love

Buchanan believes Constitution allows all faiths

WASHINGTON — Presidential candidate Pat Buchanan said today that while he believes Christianity is the "true faith," the Constitution forbids any official religion in America. "It's open to people of all faiths," Buchanan, who is seeking the Reform Party nomination, said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Reminded that he has written that "we have to re-establish the Christian community's belief as the legitimate moral foundation of American society," Buchanan replied: "I believe Jesus Christ was the son of God and I believe Christianity is the true faith. I would like all folks to come to it but I do believe that America's Constitution forbids a religious test."

Buchanan, a former aide to Presidents Nixon and Reagan, said he has become the target of name-calling "because people are afraid of the ideas I represent."

A potential rival for the Reform Party nomination, builder Donald Trump, has called Buchanan a loser and a Hitler lover and said "I guess he's an anti-Semite."

Trump

When interviewer Diane Sawyer began a question by referring to New York Times columnist and ex-Nixon aide William Safire as "your friend," Buchanan responded: "William Safire is not a friend of mine and I do not think he is an honorable man personally.... I've gotta say I represent America first. I represent America only. Mr. Safire ... in my judgment has always put Israel a little bit ahead of his own country.... When push comes to shove, we have to put the national interest of the United States of America ahead of any other country.... and that means Israel, as much as some folks love it."

On NBC's "Today," Buchanan said he hopes to put together "a new coalition of those left out, left behind."

THE DAILY (U. WASHINGTON)

Hitler man of the century, says Jew

I'm a Jew and I'm here to tell you about the worst and only Jewish Conspiracy in the history of the world. Yitzhak Rabin now sits atop the poll for Time's Person of the Century, three spots ahead of the true person of the century, Adolf Hitler. All this is thanks to e-mail forwards, synagogue announcements and whatever other means of dissemination that have been utilized to encourage people to vote for Rabin on Time's Web site.

Before I get the typical, ludicrous, "Hitler was the evillest man to ever grace God's good earth and no way in hell should he be Person of the Century" response, here is the qualification: "Time's Person of the Century is that person who, for better or worse, most influenced the course of history over the past 100 years."

Undoubtedly, Hitler's credentials for this acknowledgment are untouchable. The death count alone is unfathomable. 13 million people systematically executed in death and concentration camps on an aside, it is unconceivable that so many people, especially Jews, think only of the 6 million Jews, not the 7 million homosexuals, Roma, ethnics and Nazi political opponents who also died in the camps and unknown tens of millions more deal on the battlefields of Europe. Hitler, unlike many people who have been nominated for Person of the Century, did not invent the tool with which he shaped the world.

Salk discovered the cure for polio, Wilbur and Orville invented the airplane — instead, Hitler mastered the device of nationalism. More deadly than the plague, HIV and malaria combined, nationalism has been the driving force behind the industrialized death and destruction that has blanketed our planet in the last 150 years. Like the expert machinist or farmer, Hitler knew how to make his tool efficient and highly productive.

Israeli relations, but he did not do it alone, Yasser Arafat was just as important every step of the way. And while the peace accords negotiated by Rabin may one day be regarded as the foundation for stability in the Middle East, there has been no significant change in the day-to-day life of Jerusalem. Arabs and Jews do not walk arm-in-arm in the spirit of peace and brotherly love. There are still stonings and shootings. But the world was changed from the Beer Halls and Berlin.

Sparky, as my history prof. used to call Hitler, was not the first demagogue, and, sadly, it doesn't appear that he will be the last. However no other man, save Jesus, has caused the world to re-evaluate itself so dramatically. And the early Christian movements took a few hundred years to really develop. For just one example, appeasement became a dirty word post-Hitler and it has colored American and British foreign policy since Neville Chamberlain was run out of office.

And for what else do we owe our thanks to the man behind the mustache? If there were no Hitler, then there'd be no A-bomb, no Cold War (or maybe a worse one), no European Union, no Man on the Moon, no Israel, no liberation from colonial powers, no CIA, no United Nations, no BMW's, no Bush Hope, no Gulf War, no jet airplanes, no Women's Lib, no radar, no Guernica.

I'll qualify that. Some of these things may have happened, maybe later, maybe not exactly the same, but Hitler had a rather direct impact on these things or events that preceded them. There have been others this century, but no person could match Adolf Hitler's effect on history. Let us never forget the evil, the destruction that Nationalism has wrought, and let us vote Adolf Hitler as Time's Person of the Century.

Rich's Miss America commentary lacks reason

To the Editor:

Ben Rich doesn't know his from a hole in the ground. I have competed in this program [Miss America] for five years and it isn't a beauty pageant — it's a scholarship program. Yet Heather is beautiful inside and out. She does more for this state and country than most people ever do. Heather spends every day raising money for others. Ben is probably still sleeping at noon.

I can't believe that Mr. Rich was so upset by the fact the Heather didn't "show skin." If he wants to see a pair of breasts, why doesn't he take his pathetic self down to the strip clubs? As far as Heather's singing goes, who made Mr. Rich an expert on singing? And how can anyone criticize someone for giving $25,000 to the scholarship fund of UK? At least she gave it to us, not the University of Louisville.

He claims that Ashley Judd is hot. She had a very similar haircut to that of Heather's, and he doesn't call her a lesbian.

I was 2nd runner-up to Heather at Miss KY in 1999, and proud to say so. Heather is the perfect representative of what we should encourage our little girls to be.

Heather has become more than Ben Rich ever will be. She is admired greatly and does a wonderful job representing those of us who know what the system is really like.

Be proud of your Miss America

To the Editor:

After reading the article written by Ben Rich on Miss America, I am angry and appalled. He certainly did not watch the pageant. She was clearly the winner from the start and represented the state of Kentucky well.

She is an intelligent, well read, talented and attractive young woman. Although he is entitled to his opinion, his article contained mean-spirited and vindictive comments. Does he have a personal grievance with Miss French or just intelligent women in general? By his statements about breasts he must feel that women need to be judged only on outward beauty and nothing inside.

I am proud that she represents Kentucky and America and feel that she is a role model for everyone.

Police officers cannot have bad days

To the Editor:

Recently, Officer Tia Chilton has been writing a series of articles promoting better understanding between the campus community and the UKPD. Although I admire her efforts, I don't agree with some of her statements.

Police officers, because of the public trust they hold, cannot afford to have "bad days." They should not be swayed by how "nice" or "nasty" someone is. And certainly they shouldn't be "reprising" anyone; that is for the courts and a jury of your peers. Some occupations cannot afford lapses in professionalism. Doctors, pilots and police officers hold lives in their hands.

If a doctor or a pilot has a bad day, people can die. When a police officer has a bad day, they not only effect the people's lives, but the dignity of their lives as well. In an extreme example, look at the Haitian immigrant who was tortured while in police custody for supposedly striking a policeman, whom they eventually determined wasn't the perpetrator.

Officer Chilton's attitude in her piece was one of resignation in that the police, "...have heard every excuse..." and, "It never fails" that people complain about police behavior. Statistically some of the complaints must be legitimate. And even if it's just one, that's one too many. We the people have a right to hold them to a higher standard.

If a person cannot meet this challenge, they should be in another line of work. The safety of the community and integrity of our justice system demands it.

Campus Christians should walk the walk

To the Editor:

(Editor's note: This letter to the editor addresses Abbey Lee's "Exclusive Christians, Open your eyes" column printed on October 6th.)

Two of my friends and I, who are Christians, were talking to another good friend of ours, who did not share our faith in Jesus Christ as our Lord and Savior. Our friend, who never drank, smoked, cursed, or gossiped — just an all-around good guy — was not buying in to what we believed. Finally, I asked him why not become a Christian?

And he simply asked back, "Why would I want to become a Christian when I live a more moral life than Christians do?"

Could it be that some Christians are blending in to this world? (1 John 2:15-17) Could it be that some of us are not showing our love for others? (James 1:22) Does my friend make a good point?

Statistics tell us that the Christian rates of divorce, pre-marital sex, pornography use and debt are not that much different than nonbelievers." (Bill McCartney)

It is time for all Christians to open your eyes to the point that Abbey made, "there are people on campus that 'talk the talk,' but neglect to 'walk the walk.'"

It is true. You, me, and even Abbey are guilty of sin. But, what do you do after you try? Do you repent and try and change, or do you repeat that same sin over and over. Because when you are guilty of the latter, then you are hurting the cause of Christ, which is for all Christians to lead others to Him. (Mat. 28: 18-20)

In conclusion, Abbey was not bashing Campus Crusade or FCA. She was simply giving a much needed wake up call to those Christians not running the race to completion. (1 Cor. 9: 24-27)

So, here is my challenge to all Christians: Answer my friend's question by putting into action the popular phrase "WWJD."

Kernel named tops

Staff Report

The Kentucky Kernel received the most prestigious national award for college newspapers this weekend, the Pacemaker. The Kernel, named a Pacemaker finalist the past two years, joined the ranks of such benchmark schools as Indiana University, the University of Virginia and Duke.

"Unofficially, they consider it the Pulitzer Prize of college newspapers," said Mike Agin, media adviser for the Kernel.

The award was announced this weekend at the Associated Collegiate Press and College Media Advisers conference in Atlanta, Georgia.

"I think I had like a four-foot vertical out of my chair when they called the Kernel," said Mat Herron, last year's editor in chief of the Kernel, said of his reaction at the awards ceremony.

The Pacemaker was awarded to Herron's staff just after the newspaper underwent a major redesign.

"We took a lot of chances with this redesign... It was an experiment," Herron said.

"This is validation for all the things we did and all the things we changed."

Herron recalls the first month after the redesign, when the paper was rarely finished before 2 a.m. His and his staff's GPA's suffered considerably, but that was a small price to pay, he said, to serve as editor of one of the top six daily newspapers in the nation.

"You have to put your time in and you have to care about what you're doing," Herron said.

In addition to winning the Pacemaker, Kernel designer Chris Rosenthal was awarded second place for front page design and best info graphics, two categories of a design contest for which results were published this weekend.

No survivors expected in EgyptAir plane crash

Eerie similarities: Boeing 767's crash launches fourth search in three years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON - An EgyptAir jetliner with 217 people on board, including dozens of American tourists, plunged mysteriously into the ocean off Nantucket Island early Sunday, 33 minutes after leaving New York for Cairo.

By nightfall, searchers had retrieved debris and one body, but held out little hope of finding survivors in the chilly Atlantic waters.

Authorities said there was no distress call from the pilots before the Boeing 767 plummeted to the sea in two minutes from its cruising altitude of 33,000 feet. Though the FBI and other intelligence agencies began checking on the possibility of sabotage, President Clinton and other officials said there was no immediate indication of foul play.

Searchers found two partially inflated life rafts, life jackets, seat cushions and other small debris, none with any burn marks, said Coast Guard Rear Adm. Richard M. Larrabee. A finding of such marks on debris could suggest the possibility of a fire or explosion aboard the plane.

The air search was suspended after dark, but ships continued scouring the area. The Coast Guard said chances of anyone surviving more than 12 hours in the 58-degree water were slim.

A Navy salvage ship, the USS Grapple, and Navy divers were leaving Norfolk, Va., on Sunday night and were expected to join the search by late Monday, with orders to take debris and remains to a Navy base in Rhode Island.

U.S. officials indicated a majority of the 199 passengers on Flight 990 were Americans, including a group of 54 people bound for a 14-day trip to Egypt and the Nile.

Alan Lewis, chief executive of the Boston-based travel agency Grand Circle Corp., said most of the group members were from Colorado, Arizona and the Pacific Northwest.

The plane started its flight in Los Angeles and stopped at New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport. It took off again at 1:19 a.m. EST and went down at 1:52 a.m., roughly 60 miles south of Nantucket. The Coast Guard deployed ships, reconnaissance planes and helicopters to search an area of about 36 square miles, in waters about 270 feet deep.

It was the fourth time in three years that a major search operation was launched in the region for a plane lost at sea.

The series of crashes began with TWA Flight 800 off Long Island in July 1996, followed by Swissair Flight 111 off Nova Scotia in September 1998 and the single-engine plane carrying John F. Kennedy Jr., his wife and her sister off Martha's Vineyard in July.

Center for Clinical Research
- Lexington, Kentucky, LLC

If you have symptoms of headaches, dizziness or lightheadedness, you may be experiencing high blood pressure, or hypertension. Many people have high blood pressure and do not have symptoms. If you have a family member who is being treated for hypertension, it is a good idea to have your blood pressure checked.

THE CENTER FOR CLINICAL RESEARCH - LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY is conducting a research study to evaluate an investigational medication for the treatment of hypertension. Participants will receive free study-related material evaluations, study procedures and study medication for the duration of the 8 to 10 week trial.

We are looking for individuals with a history of high blood pressure and who are currently either untreated or taking a calcium channel blocker or an ACE inhibitor for their hypertension.

Study participants will be paid up to $240.00 upon completion.
