Campus reacts to professor's nomination

Credentials: College of Medicine dean cites Dr. Hager's articles as a contribution to the field

By Emily Hagedorn and Josh Thomas
STAFF WRITERS

The possible appointment of a UK professor to a federal medical panel is causing mixed reactions.

Dr. W. David Hager, who has written books suggesting Biblical scriptures as medical remedy, is one of the nominees for the 11-member Reproductive Health Drugs Advisory Committee.

Hager recently faced criticism about his views on contraceptives and abortion, which include suggesting girls under 18 should not be prescribed birth control.

Some fear his religious beliefs will come before science, others point to his medical credentials as sound reason for his appointment.

"If someone needs to be healed spiritually, they go see a priest or a preacher," said Casey Holland, coordinator of UK's American Civil Liberties Union. "They go to a hospital to get healed on a physical level."

Some UK officials defended Hager's credibility this week.

Emery A. Wilson, dean of the College of Medicine, said Hager has contributed to scientific literature with 41 medical journal articles, including "Protocols for Infectious Diseases in Obstetrics and Gynecology."

"Most people know his disposition on those issues, but it hasn't come up with patients," said Wilson. "I would be surprised to see David's personal feelings come between him and science."

Hager declined to return phone calls Friday.

In August, Hager was spokesman for the 17,000-member Christian Medical Association, which was among many groups that lobbied against RU-486

(Mifeprax), a drug that induces abortion in the first weeks of pregnancy.

He has also been on the Physician Resource Council for Focus on the Family, a Christian outreach organization, and has published "As Jesus Cared for Women: Restoring Women Then and Now."

Lee Sisk, a member of Campus Crusade for Christ, said the meanings behind religion and God can differ.

"You can't forget God gave us the means to create medical technology," Sisk said. "But I don't know if religious practices need to necessarily be tied into medical practice."

Other students said they think Hager blurs the line between his private life and his public duties.

"It's one thing to recommend prayer to your patients, but you can't deny someone medical service or care when you accept government money," said Joy Carr, a member of UK's Feminist Alliance.

Apollo 17 astronaut visits UK

No cheese: Moon has possible energy source

By Abby Ghibaudy
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

The last man to walk on the moon fondly remembers his lunar journey and said he could have the answer to finding more energy on earth.

Harison Schmitt, the lunar module pilot aboard Apollo 17, almost 30 years ago, visited UK Friday and spoke to students and faculty about his experiences in outer space.

Schmitt said he trained for 252 hours to learn how to operate a jet plane. His instructors thought, "if you could fly one airplane you could easily fly another," he said.

He said he flew a helicopter solo after only eight hours of training. "It was the biggest surprise of my flying life that I could do it," he said.

However, flying to the moon was different from flying a jet plane or a helicopter.

"When you move out into deep space, it takes far more competence and discipline than imagined," Schmitt said.

As a geologist, Schmitt discovered

"Honey, we never have a bad ball game when we tailgate," Felita Giles says as her plastic Mardi Gras beads click against each other.

Dressed in a blue mesh football jersey her large gold cat-head earrings catch the afternoon sun, making their blue eyes spark. Behind her guitar players sing a loud chorus. "We're from Kentucky and we like it that way!"

It's game day in the Commonwealth. Fans have braved heavy traffic and parking disasters to score the choice tailgating spots before the UK football game. A long-standing tradition, tailgating fans often come to Saturday games five or more hours early to eat, drink and catch up with friends.

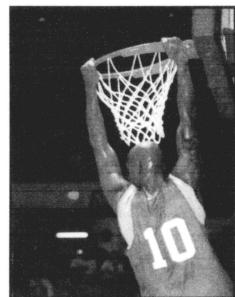

"I actually parked here last night around 7. This is where the action is," says David Rakowski, vice president of Phi Delta Theta and a business management sophomore, as a football flies over his head. "It's like a huge pep rally before the game. This is what college is all about," Rakowski says.

"It's a whole lot of fun. There's hot girls and no parents," says Chuck Begley, who drove more than three hours from Ohio to see his former high school classmate Ryan Brewer play for the University of South Carolina.

Walking by the grills and card tables under each canopy, it's easy to catch a whiff of delicious smells rising from exotic spreads. Coleman coolers open up to reveal cheep beer and choice brews.

Patterson director leaving post

Stepping down: John Stempel will continue to teach

STAFF REPORT

John Stempel, the director and professor for the Patterson School of Diplomacy and International Commerce, announced Friday he will be vacating his position at the end of the school year.

A committee will take nominations for a new director for the nationally recognized school. Nominations for Stempel's replacement are due Tuesday.

Stempel, who has been director for 10 years, will step down on June 30.

"It's just time to make the change in leadership," he said.

Stempel made the announcement at a celebration dinner held in his honor.

Stempel is lauded for raising money for the school in order to hire four tenured-track faculty members and more part-time professors.

"I think he's done a very good job," said Karen Mingst, a professor at the school. "He's moved the Patterson School ahead in a lot of different directions."

The committee, chaired by George Herring, a professor of history, will look at the nominees before the end of October and should have a decision by the end of the semester, Herring said.

The position is important to UK, he said. "The Patterson School was started a long time ago from scratch and developed into a very good program with national recognition," he said.

"This position, in terms of maintaining status and building on status" is very important, Herring said.

Stempel plans to work on his courses - he teaches the dynamics of diplomacy, politics and diplomacy of the Middle East, and cross-cultural negotiation and bargaining.

"There's a certain bitter-sweetness about it [stepping down]," he said. "But I'm 64 years old and leadership is a young man's game."

chemical links between the moon and the earth.

"We need far more energy," he said.

"The need for energy, not science, will drive our next trip."

A helium three isotope, which is present on the moon, could be the answer, he said. In the future, this helium could be used as an energy source for earth, he said.

Schmitt also predicts that space tourism will continue to increase. "Besides the energy business, tourism can have a very positive bottom line," he said. "People may be more interested in going to Mars today and the cheapest rate is from the moon."

However, insurance problems and funding must first be solved, he said.

Students and faculty who saw the astronaut at his visit to the University said they admired him.

"He is a member of the smallest club on earth: men who have walked on the moon," said Drew Andrews, a member of Kentucky Geological Survey.

"It makes you feel small, and makes me want to do as much as I can with the opportunities given to me," he said.

Others recognized the historical impact.

"He is a pioneer and explorer that is a part of history," said Patrick Gooding, member of the Kentucky Geological Survey. "Meeting someone that has been on another planet [sic] is like meeting the captain of the Santa Maria."

"I'd love to go back again," Schmitt said. "I don't think I will have the opportunity."

son cheese dip over there too," says Julie Johnson of Louisville, who cooks anything but the usual fare for her tailgating feast. "For desert we have cappuccinos, pumpkin squares and no-bake cookies."

One tent down, fowl is the food of the day. Loud friends surround Bill Hawk, a record-setting former UK punter, as he sits in his blue canvas chair, holding a dripping can.

"Well, today we're going to deep fry a turkey," he says. "It only takes about 25, 30 minutes."

After graduating in 1991, Hawk went from player to tailgating fan.

"Rain, snow, shine, we're out here," says Hawk. "But it's much more fun to be on the field. I loved playing for the Wildcats."

Up the hill and 10 cars down, USC fans flock together around a moiling, stuffed rooster. Sir Spur, going bald in several places, has traveled everywhere, even through Hurricane Floyd, to see his team play each weekend.

His "chauffeur," Melissa Sinclair, drove more than eight hours to cook her famous chili and see USC play.

"I love the atmosphere. Even when losing, tailgating kind of takes the bitterness away," Sinclair says.

Fortunately for Sinclair, USC would upset UK 16-12.

Sir Spur's neighbors have their radio blasting with a giant UK blanket hanging from the hatch. David Rakowski, vice president of Phi Delta Theta and a business management sophomore, is grilling hamburgers and passing a football.

"This is like a huge pep rally before the game," Rakowski says. "This is what college is all about."

Across the road and closer to the stadium, a rambunctious group dressed in blue and white sing along with four guitars and a tambourine.

"We're from Kentucky, and we like it that way," they sing.

A tall man in overalls, Richard "Wichita" Douthitt, puts down his guitar and reaches for a drink.

"I've been around the continent, and this group is fun," he says. Douthitt, who has played his guitar for Montgomery Gentry, George Jones and Allen Jackson, said this is his first Kentucky tailgating party.

"This is the first time I've known tailgaters to use live music," he says. "You not only get fed and all you can drink, but you get all the country music you can want."

"They used to just play their guitars after a game if we won. Then they played after a game, win or lose. But now they just play all the time," says avid tailgater David Blevins, brother of former UK basketball player J.P. Blevins.

"Once at the LSU game, my brother-in-law got smacked in the mouth by a UK fan for leaving three minutes early," he says. "He [my brother-in-law] apologized and said he had it coming."

Across from Blevins, the guitar players start again. Mike Kipper sits beside them and sings along, tapping his foot to the tambourine.

"It's all about tailgating and friends," he said. "If you just go to see a win, it's not worth it. You go to have fun, support the team. You see old friends, you know. It brings us all together."

Women's clothing store opens near UK

Now open for business:
General Eccentric offers unique style for women

By Christy Ditty
STAFF WRITER

After two years of success in Louisville, General Eccentric owner Kristin David decided to open another store to Lexington on the corner of Woodland Avenue and East Maxwell Street.

David said her women's clothing store got a warm welcome from customers when it opened Friday.

"The opening went really well," she said. "The turnout exceeded what we had thought; people were supportive." David said.

"The store sells clothes, shoes, some cosmetics and jewelry."

"We won't get any more than four to six of each item, so the chances of seeing someone else in your outfit is slim," she said. "We can rotate our inventory of ten, so you can find something different each week."

David said starting a small business is something she has always wanted to do. There was a "funky" area of Louisville where she wanted to open a women's clothing store.

When a space opened there in 1999, she knew she had to give it a try.

"I wanted to be my own

Kristin Blair, a recent UK graduate, now works as a manager of General Eccentric, a women's clothing store that opened Friday. The store is open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday-Saturday and noon to 6 p.m. Sunday.

boss so I didn't have to do things the corporate way," she said.

David graduated from the University of Louisville with a fine arts degree and worked for a commercial interior design store for a few years. She switched to part time when the store opened.

"Once I saw the store was maintaining itself, I quit my job and threw myself into it," she said.

Her husband, Chris, was her biggest supporter and even helped talk her into opening the store.

"Kristin is very good at picking out things, she watches award shows and reads lots of magazines to know what is in style," he said. Kristin David said she and her husband travel to two big trade shows a year to pick out clothes for the store.

"They are more fun for me, not him," she said. The store is opening in a spot that has had trouble keeping tenants over the years.

Candace Ickes, co-owner of neighboring store The Court of Two Sisters, said that she knows of many stores that have come and gone from that spot.

She said that most of the owners didn't leave because of a lack of business.

"I think this is a wonderful street, but it is small, with not a lot of parking or room for expansion for shops that want to grow," Ickes said.

The stores included Magic Beans, a coffee shop; Remember When, a vintage clothing store; and Delaware River Trading Co., a New York-based mail order catalog company.

Still, David said she hopes that her success in Louisville continues in Lexington.

"We immediately got a good response in Louisville," she said.

"There were not any other stores like this. Our customers were happy we weren't as expensive as other boutiques."

Here's a look back at events and issues from last week. If you want to sound off on any of these, e-mail the Dialogue desk at dialogue@kykernel.com

Bush called Saddam Hussein a "murderous tyrant" and said his regime is working to develop nuclear weapons. Bush referenced links between Saddam and terrorist organization al-Qaida, Iraq's stockpile of chemical and biological weapons and the possibility of Iraq use the weapons to "blackmail" those who oppose him.

TUESDAY

Students will pay more in student fees next year if a Student Government proposal to raise fees is approved, the Kernel reported.

The proposal would take $24 more per year from each student, including $3.25 for SG, $2 for the Student Activities Board and $8 for the Student Center.

The proposal was approved by a 17-4 vote during the Oct. 2 SG Senate meeting.

The increase would raise fees for the Student Center for the first time in 22 years.

The increase would bring total student fees from $247.25 to $271.25.

THURSDAY

Alan Stein announced he will not enter the Lexington mayoral race as a write-in candidate.

Stein, the owner the Lexington Legends professional baseball team, said he wanted to spend as much time as possible with his family and business.

Stein said he was interested in running in the race because he wanted to spur candidates Scott Crosbie and Teresa Isaac to raise campaign standards and focus on issues.

FRIDAY

The Senate and the House passed resolutions giving President Bush authority to use force against Iraq.

Each individual in Kentucky's eight-member delegation approved the resolutions.

The House resolution passed by a vote of 296-133. Voting yes were 215 Republicans and 81 Democrats. Voting no were 126 Democrats, six Republicans and one independent.

The Senate resolution passed by a vote of 77-23. Voting yes were 48 Republicans and 29 Democrats. Voting no were 21 Democrats, one Republican and one independent.

Democratic presidential hopefuls supported the resolution in the House, but their votes separated them from the majority of their party.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., approved the resolution.

SATURDAY

At least 187 people were killed and more than 300 others were wounded when a bomb exploded in a crowded nightclub in Bali, Indonesia, the Associated Press reported.

Two Americans died and three were injured in the bombing, the worst terrorist attack in Indonesia's history.

Another bomb exploded near the island's U.S. consular office, but there were no injuries, police said.

President Bush offered U.S. assistance in finding the perpetrators and said the attack was "a cowardly act designed to create terror and chaos."

IN OUR OPINION

SG overstepped bounds with possible SAB takeover

From a small yet impressive office in the Student Center sits a man driven to be a leader.

Like any ambitious young leader, he brews big ideas.

And like many ambitious young politicians, Student Government President Tim Robinson has a big appetite for power.

A student organization — one firmly rooted in campus culture — said Robinson has tried to erode its power by making it a branch of Student Government.

During the summer, Robinson approached the president of Student Activities Board with the idea of bringing her organization under SG's jurisdiction.

Robinson said he thinks SAB, whose officers are appointed rather than elected like SG positions, needs oversight. Together, he said, the organizations could have more influence on campus.

Robinson said he has no personal reasons for either suggestion. He'll graduate in the spring and just wants to leave things in the best position.

It's hard to believe this from a man who has a history of hoarding power for personal gain.

In his first campaign for president, he recruited a coalition of senate candidates who, in turn for his help campaigning, would get a certain number of their friends to the polls to vote for Robinson.

SG and SAB have different missions. SG should spend its money supporting student services — such as tutoring, legal services and campus security.

SAB is an entertainment and cultural programming board that should operate independently.

The groups should cooperate, but putting SAB under SG's wing is unnecessary.

Such a move has the potential to steal the decision-making power away from students who care about bringing quality entertainment and cultural events to campus and place it into the hands of those who make decisions based on campaign promises and owed favors.

Robinson overstepped his bounds by suggesting his organization oversee SAB.

Robinson may graduate this spring, but expect to see his name appearing on voting ballots in this state for a long time: he's a natural leader and a savvy politician.

Just remember to look to see if he stepped on any people to get there.

Belafonte's criticism of Powell out of line

By Kevin McAbee

GUEST COLUMNIST

One of the most accomplished men in America was attacked with racist comments on Tuesday.

In an effort to taint the character and achievements of Secretary of State Colin Powell, a prominent figure compared Powell to a slave who solely aims to please his master. Was it a militant neozazi or a Ku Klux Klan member? No, it was celebrated black singer Harry Belafonte.

According to CNN, Belafonte gave a radio interview in which he stated, "In the days of slavery, there were those slaves who lived on the plantation, and [there] were those slaves that lived in the house. You got the privilege of living in the house if you served the master ... exactly the way the master intended to have you serve him. Colin Powell's committed to come into the house of the master. When Colin Powell dares to suggest something other than what the master wants to hear, he will be turned back out to pasture."

Belafonte discrediting Powell shows he is as bigoted as anyone else is. Belafonte believes Powell is a black man who is not making his own decisions on political issues. What he doesn't realize is not all blacks have to think the same way. Belafonte is trying to use race to keep people like Powell from crossing political lines. This is nothing more than a slanderous scare tactic to keep Powell from pursuing his own ideas. Powell is receiving the criticism because he is a high-ranking black Republican. Historically, the majority of blacks have been active in the Democratic Party. Belafonte must believe that Powell is a sellout to the black race. He is attempting to discredit Powell's ideology because it does not agree with what Belafonte believes is the correct African American stance. However, by making these comments, Belafonte is discrediting his own views by sounding hateful.

Powell is showing that African Americans can succeed in any form of politics. Not only has he succeeded both in the military and politics, but he has done so while maintaining a Republican ideology. This scares many Democratic leaders who want to continue the tradition of all minorities voting for their party.

Lost in the uproar over Powell is the comparison of President Bush as a slave owner. Belafonte is trying to paint Bush as a rich white plantation owner who bosses around his assistants like they were his property. This is an uneducated attack as well. Bush has many black staff members, such as Powell and National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice. It is easy to try and typecast an upper-class, white, Southern Republican as a racist, but it is also a cheap shot.

According to the same CNN article, Powell responded to Belafonte's comments by saying, "If Harry had wanted to attack my politics, that was fine. If he wanted to attack a particular position I hold, that was fine. But to use a slave reference, I think, is unfortunate and is a throwback to another time and another place that I wish Harry had thought twice about using."

Powell could have reacted much more strongly to the comments. But he took the high road and calmly respond with an accurate understanding of the situation. Belafonte had every right to disagree with Powell's political ideas and stances. However, he did so in the most ineffective manner possible. We can all learn from this. When one disagrees with another's ideas, it is best to attack the ideas, not the person.

Colin Powell is one of the greatest men in America. I would never qualify that by saying Colin Powell is one of the greatest black Americans. He is simply a great role model for all young people. He is a strong leader, and George Bush was wise to give him such a powerful position. For someone to try and bring him down via racial slights is perplexing. But for someone of his own race to try and bring him down is sickening.

Despite all of the reasons behind it, nothing could be more spineless than comparing a fellow black man to a slave solely over political disagreements.

Harry Belafonte should receive the same intense backlash that any other man would receive. He may believe that Powell is doing the black race a disservice by being Republican, but with his comments, Belafonte did a much more offensive disservice.

Costly mistakes prevent UK win

By Melanie Curtisinger

When the crowd filed out of Commonwealth Stadium Saturday night, many of the 70,547 on hand were probably disappointed that the Cats fell short on the last play of the game, leading to a defeat at the hands of South Carolina.

But the game was lost on more than one play. The little mistakes that didn't hurt UK against the likes of UTEP and Middle Tennessee State earlier in the year have proven too much for UK in the Southeastern Conference. A team that was 4-0 three weeks ago is now on a two-game losing streak.

"We shot ourself in the foot all night," said UK Coach Guy Morriss of the USC game. "I thought we would come out and execute our offense better."

The UK offense, which led the conference in scoring, failed to capitalize on scoring opportunities early.

Justin Haydock returned the opening kickoff of the game 33 yards to the USC 46, giving the Cats excellent field position for their opening drive. Two plays later, quarterback Jared Lorenzen pitched the ball to receiver Tommy Cook, who threw the ball down field. The pass, intended for Derek Abney, was underthrown and intercepted by cornerback Dunta Robinson at the USC 10-yard line.

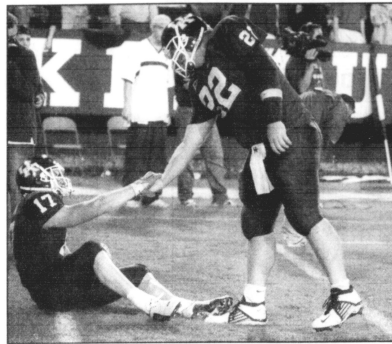

On UK's next series, punter Glenn Pakulak faked a punt and threw to an open Cook, who fumbled, allowing USC's Derrick Ray to recover on the 38-yard line. The play, which came on fourth and 21, came as a surprise to fans and the coaching staff.

"We did not call it from the sidelines," Morriss said. "While the defense held the USC offense to a standstill, the UK offense continued its woes. Deep in USC territory, fullback Mike Kham-pake fumbled on the 13-yard line in the opening minutes of the second quarter.

On its next possession, UK finally put its first points on the scoreboard. Artrose Pinner began the drive with a 24-yard gain, putting the Cats in USC territory for the fifth time on the night. Then, Lorenzen threw his only touchdown of the night — an 11-yard pass to Cook.

UK added a 40-yard field goal from kicker Taylor Begley late in the first quarter. "We were happy to have a 10-point lead in the first half," Morriss said. "But (South Carolina) came out in the second half and executed better than we did."

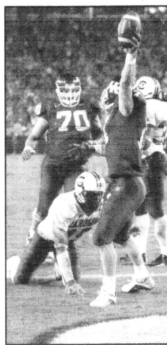

USC made its way down field to open up the third quarter, but the Cat defense held USC at the UK 21, forcing USC to kick a 38-yard field goal to pull within 10-3. In the fourth quarter, USC quarterback Corey Jenkins fumbled in the endzone. Cornerback Derrick Tatum dove past the ball, and USC tackle Watts Sanderson recovered it for the touchdown, tying the game 10-10.

USC only needed eight plays to score again, but after missing the extra point, the Cats still had a chance. UK drove to the six, but Lorenzen couldn't find a target in the endzone, and turned the ball over on downs.

"It was definitely slippery," said receiver Aaron Boone, the intended target for Lorenzen on fourth down. "But I'm not blaming anyone — we're blaming ourselves." UK still had one last chance. After an intentional safety by USC, five plays later Lorenzen heaved the ball into the right corner of the endzone. Several USC defenders battled Cook for the ball, but the pass fell to the ground and USC held on 16-12.

"That hurt. We just scrambled for it," said senior Ronnie Riley. "We aren't where we thought we were, and it's disappointing."
