Unions reach out to UK staff members

Local branches hope to begin membership drive among UK's non-teaching staff within two weeks

IN ENDROY MEN.

UK staffers have approached local branches of two national unions for help in organizing, and the two unions will soon offer membership to the proposes. But a leading UK believe enough of the staff are willing to join to make a difference.

The American Federation of Teachers Kentucky branch is joining in a partnership with the local 3372 of the Communications Workers of America, and leaders of the groups said they hope to begin signing up members within the next two weeks after all the details are hammered out.

"It's a group of employees coming together to voice similar concerns," said Charles Wells, executive director of the AFT-Kentucky. "It's our job to help them get their voice heard."

Membership will be opened to the non-teaching members of UK's approximately 9,600 staff. Staff members on hand for the news conference at the CWA Lexington headquarters today said the union push is an effort to deal with a number of staff issues, including pay and retiree benefits.

The recent outrage over salary and benefits was triggered by a proposed two-tier salary pool raise system, which would give staff a 3 percent salary pool increase and faculty a 5.5 percent salary pool increase and faculty a 5.6 percent salary pool increase. Staffers have emphasized, however, which was been a continuation of problems, as and Terry Olsen, a computer support specialist in the College of Agriculture. "There's other issues that go on and we've tried to address."

Olson mentioned staff retiree benefits and cited 2004 UK Human Resources statistics, which show that about 1,000 UK staffers earn wages below the national poverty level and an additional 900 or so are and not reaching staff will earning wages below the local living wage.

UK President Lee Todd has said that the problem is not one of UK's willingness to give staffers the appropriate salaries, but rather a lack of Munting from the stell egislature of the staff is also a goal of the two unions. "We will be present in the next legislature and all legislatures after that fighting for more faunding for UK." Wells said.

In the meantime, staffers will continue to work as usual. Collective bargaining is not an option — by law - at this point, which prohibits anything along the lines of a strike.

"We can't strike." Garkovich said. "A strike's a nuclear option anyway. It's something you try to avoid. The biggest action that they (the staff) have is (to sway) public opinion. They can't be heard in ones and twos."

Both the staffers and the union leaders also emphasized this is a "voluntary employee advocacy group" and no one will be forced to join.

However, Russ Williams, staff

How to explain how a movie with no built-in cult following — no namessake comic book, no J.K. Rowling or J.R.R. Tolkien source material, no characters named Skywalker — has become one of those only-on these.
Back in August, screenwriter Josh Friedman wrote on his blog that he first heard of "Snakes on a Plane" when he was approached by New Line Chema to do rewrite work on the script. Although he eventually said no, it was then that he became obsessed with the concept, he writes, "Not as a movie ... as a sort of Philosophy."

THIS WEEK'S TOPIC: Musings on the 2006 men's basketball season

■ George Mason head coach Jim Larranaga shouldn't get a job at a big school, even after the magical run through the tournament. This season was a mind-boggler for college basketball because there wasn't a dominant inside player that we could say would be the unquestioned first pick in the draft; this was the season for a team with mediocre talent that creates match up problems to go far into the bracket. Next year, sans Ohio State's run to the championship game, it'll be back to normal as far as tournament upsets go.

FORTS EDITOR

If Adam Morrison had been some 8 points per game, 4 rebounds per game guy for Gonzaga, crying with three seconds left in the game wouldn't have mattered as much to anyone. But the fact that he is the Second Coming of Larry Bird and looked like the villain from the Scream movies in all the newspaper photos the next morning made it into a national story. I haven't seen anyone with such a terrible look on their face since Nancy Kerrigan. (Too soon?)

Apparently. UConn's athletes nearly saved them from defeat in the Elite Eight, though George Mason played delean in the Euler Child, intogen cooking whach picked an almost-perfect game. Florida beat the Patriots with size and defense, something lots of people, even Southeastern Conference fans, didn't think they'd be able to do. Their athleticism was the icing on the cake; but even if they weren't as long and strong, they would've run Mason over. Sadly

■ If Joakim Noah stays, the "Noah's gay" chants are going to be sonic-boom loud when the Gators come to Rupp next March, though it's lame and embarrassing for UK and its fans.

Let's all start now and think of something slightly more creative. Any ideas mailed in will be printed in a riture edition of The Score, permitting they aren't full of language or overtones deemed too "colorful" for public consumption. E-mail sports@kykernel.com.

■ The eRupption Zone left a lot to be desired this season. Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence, Kansas., made Rupp look like a funeral home. Granted, the stakes level wasn't, but actual fans support their team through everything. Any transplanted UK student who has rooted for favorite teams through tough times, like cubs fans, could be found pleading for the Cats even down 15 in the late stages of Senior Day, But their Lexingtonian counterparts were plodding up the stairs to their cars. Coincidence? Or are UK fans spoiled like month-old 2 percent?

■ UK fans rooting for the SEC in the NCAA Tournament is a behavior that I just don't agree with It makes sense intellectually, because it makes UK Tribaces sense intellectually, because it ribaces on look better, but the arguments I've heard in favor of it are all emotional. It isn't classy, Picking one team over another on the basis of some contrived border agreement, like Alabama over Alaska, doesn't have anything to do with class. It's neither classy nor un-

The Lexington Public Library will host its second annual One Book One host its second annual One Book One Lexington event this month. The event is supported by The Friends of the Lexington Public Library and coincides with National Library Meek this week.

"The event hopes to have Lexington residents discussing and reading the same book," said, Kelil Dean, program Director for Lexington Public Libraries. "Not only to encourage an appreciation for reading, but to also have a stronger sense of community."

"The Great Gatsby" was written by

This Thursday will see organizers for One Book One Lexington at The Legends' opening day at Applebee's Park handing out T-shirts for fans in attendance. Interspersed between musical selections from such greats as Jelly Roll Morton and Fats Waller will be selections from the Dook on the CD.

Displays from the 1920s will be seen at all library locations during the month of April. Events include poetry readings, listening to radio shows from the 20s, the viewing of the film version of "The Great Catsby" starring Robert Redford, Ma Farrow and Sam Waterston, and discussions of the book, including a billingual discussion in Spanish and a discussion with a Fitzgerald scholar. Oh my God.

I know it sounds silly, but I didn't realize that all of this was closing in so fast until a few days ago.

Maybe it was finally getting my last piece of paperwork turned in for graduation, or getting my commencement notification in the mail, but the other day I looked in the mirror and said, "You don't have to go to school anymore," and I started to flip out and I have been getting progressively more insane.

As my esteemed colleague Andrew Martin wrote it in his Wednesday column. I'm going through what some would call a "quarter-life crisis."

Think about it: You worked all through grade school to get to colege. You've now worked all through college to get your degree and a job. You'll then work all through your professional career to earn money, get promotions, and eventually retire.

You've been working this whole time so you can ... work some more?

As if college hadn't ruined my idealistic outlook on life enough, this whole graduation thing is the coup de grace; once I leave this institution, everything changes.

Protect U.S. horses from slaughter

Today, spring will truly have sprung once the call to post for Keeneland's first race of the spring meet has been trumpted. For many students, Keeneland is just another excuse to miss Friday classes, get dressed up and taligate. Sadly, once the horses leave the track, the thought of where they end up after they are done racing never seems to enter the minds of spectators.

An issue currently trying to be set right is that of horse slaughter. The recent death of 1966 Derby winner Ferdinand, who was sparked awareness throughout the horse in dustry. Thoroughbred racehorses are not the only targets; different horse types all of the country are fighting the same battle. Nick 2tto, two-time berby winning trainer and director of Thoroughbred Retirement Fund, has become a national spokesman for the National Horse Coalition. On March 15, U.S. District Court made the decision to continue to allow the slaughter of our horses. The American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act, H.R. 503, will ensure that no American horse may be killed for foreign consumption.

This is an issue that is not purposely be-

This is an issue that is not purposely being swept under the rug; it is simply unknown by today's public. The racing industry is doing what it can to bring this into the limelight, and the need for public support is without the added stresses of oil drilling operations.

Oil drilling not only directly affects wildlife habitat by taking up large amounts of space, but also has severe consequences in terms of hydrology. Massive amounts of water will be removed or rerouted in the process of drilling. I do not wish to downplay the importance of restoration projects or the rebuilding of the Gulf Coast, but framing it in the consext of hurricane relief and the national budget is not the way to get things done.

SG's legitimacy lies in student support

SG's legitimacy lies in student support

We finally know the truth.

Thanks to multiple sources, in addition to research done by The Kentucky Kernel, we now know that we here at the support of the sources, and the sources of the so with the current Student Government are piling up at a ridiculous rate, yet students' attention toward these issues is dropping off faster than the public support for Rich Brooks.

I think the majority would agree that SG President Becky Ellingsworth's tenure could be described as (fill in the blank with any synonym for the word unproductive). SG President-elect Jonan Brown's tenure could be just as bad. The problem is that the number of students who care enough to vote is inadequate. These numbers are so low that the statement that these people "represent the whole student population" cannot be true. Unlike the football team's never-ending woes, this problem's solution is not for the students to get bilized and shrug off the losses. The voter turnout problem can't just be shaken off and forgotten with a case or a fifth. Change something; get the students out to vote more so we can say that the voter turnout accurately represents the student population.

Online voting needed at UK

UK's deal-last standing of voter turnout in the SEC is a clear sign that online voting needs to be implemented.

It has been discussed and debated, now is the time to make it happen. There are those of us who don't live on campus and have the knowledge of when and where voting may take place.

Having the ability to vote online will allow practically anyone to vote from many different places at their leisure (within the allotted time).

All the schools that have integrated online voting into their elections have seen increases in voter turnout. It seems odd that in the digital revolution we are currently in. UK seems to be lagging behind.
