Former Sen. Wendell Ford's visit to UK on Tuesday allowed students to gain an understanding of his perceptions of the suicide hijackings.

Ford, a Democrat, said many agencies in the government had prior information that the tragedies were going to happen.

"We had sufficient warning over the years and we didn't prepare ourselves for what happened," he said.

Quinton Nation, an agriculture economics freshman, agreed with Ford. "Our country was aware but didn't do anything to react," he said.

Nation was disappointed that Ford didn't have an answer to what the United States should do.
'He addressed the question but didn't give a solution," he said.
Even though it didn't surprise Ford that our nation has become a casualty to terrorism he did offer advice to students.
"We should live life and not let this occasion spook us ... They (students) should help the community," he said.
Ford specifically mentioned

Ford specifically mentioned the recent hate crimes that have occurred on campus since the suicide hijackings. And he said the solution is within us.

"Stop the hate crimes. That will be a plus. We are not that type of country," he said.

Along with promoting student involvement. Ford urged people to get involved in the health industry as a way to combat bioterrorism.

Lorenzen leaving?

The Cincinnati Post reported Tuesday that sophomore quarterback Jared Lorenzen will transfer at the end of this season. But his step-father says it's a rumor and there's no discussion of Lorenzen leaving UK.

Lorenzen started the 2001 season opener against Louisville but head coach Guy Morriss has started redshirt freshman Shane Boyd over Lorenzen in the last four games.

"Shane is the guy for our future for the type of offense that we want to have here. I still think when we can and the right opportunity presents itself that we play Jared," Morriss said Monday.

Lorenzen didn't play any against Florida, Ball State or South Carolina. He played in the second half against Ole Miss, giving the Cats 10 points.

Speakers challenging racial perceptions

Truth: Descendants of Thomas Jefferson will talk about race in contemporary America

In 1998, a woman in Staten Island, N.Y., waited for DNA test results to come back to confirm a rumor in her family for generations. The story that her family was tied to the family of generations. The story that her family was tied to the family of former President and founding father Thomas Jefferson had continually been passed down.
When the test came back with favorable results, Juliu Jefferson Westerinen was ecstatic. She decided to tell America that she had proof that the rumor was true.

Shay Bankes Young, a black woman, also anxiously awaited the same test results. Her family had passed around the story from generation to generation about the connection to the Jefferson estate.

Both women successfully connected their families to the affair Jefferson had with his slave, Sally Hemings.
A profound finding, this twist of American history brought Bankes Young and Westerinen together to speak out about race relations in America. And they're coming to UK.
Together and separately, Banks-Young and Westerinen have appeared on a variety of talk shows since the DNA revelations. The two have also given several interviews to national magazines.

Online music returns, but at cost

NEW YORK — The recording industry an nounced a licensing agreement with songwriters and music publishers Tuesday that will help clear the way for industry-backed music distribution over the Internet. The deal allows members of the Recording Industry Association of America, which includes all five major labels, to license for online use any song from the Harry Fox Agency, the largest in the industry. The recording industry is hoping to launch two online music subscription services later this year. Sony and Universal have teamed up to form pressplay; the other three major labels — Warner, EMI and Bertelsmann's BMG — are backing the rival service MusicNet. Napster reached its own agreement with music publishers last month. The licenses will cover both the streaming of music as well as limited downloads of music files, meaning ones that can be played only for a limited time or for a limited number of playbacks.

IN OUR OPINION

And the truth will be released

It's never too late to do the right thing — and we're glad the university decided to do so.

It's a victory and the Kernel got information vital to the public, but it's unfortunate that university officials waited until they heard the Kernel planned to file a lawsuit against them before they decided to take us seriously and release the information they once denied. Regardless of their hesitation, they should be commended for releasing the information.

for releasing the information.

UK will release information containing the race, gender and ages of all employees, though employees' names will remain unidentified. Initially, UK denied an open records request that asked for a database detailing the name, gender, race, date of birth, salary and job title of UK employees. The Kernel then appealed to the attorney general, who sided with UK, saying the release of the information was an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

There is a catch, though. The university agreed to release the information with one condition: if the Kernel discovers the identity of an employee it will not publish race gender and age without information with one condition: If the Kernel discovers the iterative of an employee, it will not publish race, gender and age without corroboration from the individual or other sources. Even though this sounds a bit tricky, the Kernel will be able to pursue its goals of analyzing equity of pay based on gender, race and age.

It's a great thing the Kernel accomplished the goal of obtaining the records with minimal controversy. Reporters can now spend their time evaluating and analyzing the data instead of talking with attorneys about why the information should be public. From the beginning, there was no reason for the university to deny the public the right to view this information.

Thanks to our supporters, including the Lexington Herald-Leader, the Louisville Courier-Journal and the Associated Press, for saying publicly and loudly through their publications that it's absurd to say a person's gender and race are private matters.

We're hopeful the public won't have to threaten to file a lawsuit the next time they seek information the University and attorney general say is "private.

We'll see.

A new UK? Some things never change

Amanda Thompson, senior staff writer Tim Staley, senior staff writer Jennifer Kasten, at-large meml

Josh Sullivan, at-large member

If nothing changes, nothing changes. I tried to be optimistic about getting a new president for the university. The seasons have changed, but the policies at UK have not. President Lee Todd began his presidency with the disarming semblance of change. The barricades around Maxwell Place came down, but the walls that block understanding remain.

Todd has continued to use the rhetoric of wanting to reach Top-20 university status, attracting big gun research professors and snatching more grants, all the while ignoring many concerns of the students, faculty and staff.

UK Student Government President Tim Robinson was quick to sing Todd's praises because he put hot dog stands on campus. I must have missed the protest rally for hot dogs. Students of all nations, vegans and vegetarians gathered together with one common goal: chanting, moaning, and crying out for "hotdogs!" My question to Robinson is, do you know what hot dogs are made of?

Ido not have are problem with becoming a top ranking university but I do that we are problem with the total disregard for the writing was reduced to numbers when Charles T. Wethington, Jr. was president, and the only thing that has changed with Todd is the shuffling of these numbers. New freshmen mean new numbers, and increased tuition means higher budget numbers. Todd urged the faculty and staff at UK to work toward the Top-20 goal with ambition that surpasses that of increasing the amount of federal research capital. Todd said officials would instead develop analytical goals measuring federal research dollars, as well as faculty and student quality.

I have a class this semester that I was excited about. It should have been a great class and could have been a great class. The problem is that it has a student enrollment of about 500. The desks are practically on top of each other—small and bolted to the floor. The table of each desk is within inches of the desks are practically on top of each other—small and bolted to the floor. The table of each desk is within inches of the desks t and the like.

In order to have a quality institution the voice of students and faculty must not be neutered. The fence and shrubbery have been torn down so we can see the outside of Todd's house, but when I see the facade of the house I can't help thinking about the facade of change. UK's policy decision was given a new figurehead and a new wrapper. But, once you get past the superficial, it's just business as usual.

cannot escape the carbon monoxide plague

It's a beautiful Friday morning. A gentleam of the peers through a pathway from the Classroom Building to Funkhouser. Unfortunately, the very breeze that serves to bring a smile to my face simultaneously produces yet another venue for second hand smoke to billow heavily around me and infiltrate my lungs.

It is a smile to my face simultaneously produces yet another venue for second hand smoke to billow heavily around me and infiltrate my lungs.

It is a smile to the second hand smoke to billow heavily around me as the second hand smoke to billow heavily around me as the second hand smoke to billow heavily around me must be a smoker — I've even managed to meet and befriend three or four who don't light up and blow smoke on me 7 to make things even better some of them don't smoke at all.

I realize listing every physical health complication that smoking entails will only cause people to roll their eyes as the words go in one ear and out the other. With that in mind, I'm going to skip over the health lecture and focus on the issue of being a polite smoker.

I don't care if you smoke until your lungs shrivel up and die You can smoke yourself into a coughing, hacking mess and I'll leave you be I'm not telling anyone to stop smoking, but please when you do smoke be considerate of those who don't Second-hand smoke is not just a myth or something they teach you about to fill up space between first and second bell in a boring junior high school health class. It is in fact, to my dismay, what 50 percent of the air I breathe on campus seems to be composed of.

Second-hand smoke is the third leading cause of preventable death in this country, killing 53,000 non-smokers in the United States each year. For every eight smokers the tobacco industry kills, it akes one non-smoker with them. Perhaps it is simply my overactive imagination, but non-smokers she attually rare enough at UK to be deemed a minority Assentia that God has bestowed upon me and attempt to upkeep it by making wise personal choices. While others have a full right to turn a blind eye to the conseright to turn a blind eye to the co quences of a vice such as smoking, their rights end when it comes to violating those of others.

We have a beautiful campus, and being outside on a great day is usually a pleasant thing. However, the appeal of claiming one of the new benches outside of Patterson Office Tower and curling by study is obtained to be study is one of the new benches outside of Patterson Office Tower and curling by study is obtained to be study and proceeds to first inhale and then blow out a foul stream of carbon monoxide. It may sound like Im exaggerating or simply pointing out occasional occurrences to magnify my point, but the reality is that I've had to move to escape the premises of an impolite smoker far too many times.

UK is attuned to the fact that we are overwhelmed by a gigantic population of smokers, and to accommodate them, has placed various receptacles to put out cigarettes around campus. While some do take advantage of them, other find it perfectly acceptable to toss their lit cigarette behind them as they walk, never minding that it may (and this has actually occurred to an acquaintance) land on another student's shoe or back-pack. To have that happen to you is about the equivalent of taking a walk in the park only to have a bird pass over your head and suddenly dump the contents of its bowels on you. Both situations don't occur often enough to become major problems, but when they do the victim tends to become disgruntled. And today, I am far more than disgruntled. Smoking is practically a way of life at UK and virtually impossible to avoid when exiting any building on campus, it seems that unless I hide out until afternoon classess are over and students empty out of Central Campus; I am destined to have smoke bown at mc All I ask of you is a little consideration. Keep your carbon monoxide to yourself.
