UKLA: Announcement of the election results for the Professional Organization should appear next week. We should be hearing from the new Chairperson soon concerning our first meeting.

TUNED-IN LIBRARY: "'This is strictly an undergraduate library,' explained University of Maryland library director J. Donald Thomas. 'We don't care if the faculty ever comes in here. Our purpose is to dispense information and we don't care what format it might come in.'

Which is the basic reason why the university's undergraduate library is one of the most popular and well used spaces on campus. In a number of notable ways the library has made its concessions to the undergraduate culture.

It is open 24 hours a day, for example, to accommodate the sometimes bizarre studying habits of college undergraduates. And, yes, there really are people who show up to read and study at 4 or 5:00 a.m. Sundays.

One of the most frequented study spots in the library is a completely defurnished room wired for quadraphonic sound. Four speakers blare forth an assortment ranging from Jefferson Airplane to the sound of a roller coaster in motion. All the furniture was taken out of the room so that students could lie or squat in corners, simply relaxing to listen to the music and study. 'I listen to the music and associate it with what I'm studying,' says one student." (College Management, 8:10, August/September 1973)

MISSING: "One American traveler doing some research in the Vatican Library in Rome needed to consult a work published in 1580. He filled out a request slip which was later returned to him marked 'missing since 1632.'" (New York Times, August 13, 1973)

VISITOR: Mary Cassata, Assistant Director of University Libraries for Public Service will be visiting our library on September 28th. She has a Council on Library Resources fellowship to study the problem of faculty status for librarians. If you should have a chance to talk with Ms. Cassata, please do so and assist her in any way you can.
