Coches Tarantulas Decide on Styles of Easter Season
The Spider Mounds; The Female Emptied Dad's Purse; and All Are Acre

While the university co-eds are dabbling madly about hunting just the right shade of new Easter bonnet to match a new Easter frock, and while the fellows are anxiously re-reading their bank books, we find that the human race is the only one interested in the important question of what will be the style this Easter.

Over in the entomology department, there is a tarantula who will gladly give any other tarantulas, and other persons interested, a few style tips to have the only position to do this for he received his new spring suit Thursday, when, for the first time since he came to the Experiment Station, he mounted.

SPRING VACATION

Tomorrow will be the beginning of the long awaited spring vacation. Everyone has been yawning, sighing and groaning with that so-called fatigue which demands a rest. The louder clamors for vacation, claiming utter exhaustion as a reason, have merged into tales of what "I'm going to do at home, where we're going and what we're going to see."

This time of year marks the abandonment of the winter spirit, of the winter woemens, and of the winter woemens. Summer is coming and even if it is threatening zero weather and if people are freezing to death in the north, girls are bravely showing off their short coats, stiff straw hats and light dresses.

Shopping districts are crowded with university people who are spending their April allowance before it has arrived. Easter bonnets are forming the nucleus for many a charming spring outfit, new neckties, for many a masculine wardrobe. What is going to be worn is vying with the weather for popularity as a topic of idle conversation. This is the one time of the year that men wittingly and women proudly reveal their inherent vanity.

With the new things will come new friends. Vacation will mark the termination of many an old affair and the beginning of another. Many disillusioned lovers will be wandering aimlessly around the campus waiting for some excitement to find them, catch them on the rebound and furnish a new set of illusions. Mr. Arderly will have a very choice column for his admirers to read, new bits to be easy to ferret out. For all disillusioned lovers The Kernel suggests that if they are hunting for someone to patch up their broken hearts that they file applications with Mr. Arderly for the necessary publicity.

While we are throwing off the old winter cocoon let's try and throw off the winter listlessness and come back to school with a little animation and ambition. This is a time to make good the New Year's resolutions that have so obviously failed; it is the time to make the professors realize that we are trying and that we are not as dumb as we may seem. Meanwhile, The Kernel hopes everyone will go everywhere, see everyone and do everything that they have been talking about doing since Christmas and will come back with a little

THE SYMBOLISM OF EASTER

Easter, the most joyous and festive day of the church calendar, is also the richest in symbolism. Every custom that we associate with Easter has back of it some deeper meaning, expressive of the significance of Christ's resurrection.

Our old friend the Easter Bunny, the most prolific of animals, is a symbol of Christ's promise of abundant life. The Easter egg has many interpretations: the egg itself signifies the hope that the dead will become animated with life; the little Easter chicks are a realization of this hope. Even the colors of the eggs have a meaning—purple and gold for the King of Heaven, and green for the spring of the year when nature awakens to renewed life. The children's Easter egg hunt is the quest for the beautiful things of life.

The church on Easter Sunday is decorated not with cut flowers, but with living, growing plants, and the places of honor are given to the white Madonna Lily, symbol of the purity of the Virgin. The Easter candles have two meanings—the light for God's guidance; the flame for Christ's purification.

The observance, then, of these old customs is not mere meaningless child's play. It is a poetic expression, through beautiful symbolism, of the joy and hope which each Easter celebration brings.

GOOD WILL

It has not been many days since the whole of the state centered its critical gaze upon the campuses of the University of Kentucky and Centre College. Just as, years before the starting announcement of the severing of athletic relations between Kentucky University (now Transylvania) and Kentucky State College (our own alma mater) had met with some public disapproval, the move made to discontinue athletic relations between Centre and the university aroused an excited roar of comment, both in Lexington and in Danville, with reverberations heard in many homes throughout the state.

That unfortunate ill feeling has not been pleasant; the faculty members and the student body of the University of Kentucky have regretted that any action they have taken caused an unfriendliness between the two institutions. But perhaps the most forward step toward "shaking hands and forgetting about it" is the fostering of the Centre dramatic group in its production accompanying a program given by the Guilford players tonight.

The cast and the director of the Centre play are being entertained before their performance, and will be warmly welcomed by the audience tonight. Friendly relations between different groups on both campuses will do much to take away the "bitter taste," and The Kernel hopes that Centre students will find only welcome and hospitality on our campus.

LITERARY SECTION

KATHERINE FIEGUS, Editor
IF YOU—
If you won't take me in my places,
There are other lads with handsome faces;
If you won't kiss me, listen, man,
There's plenty in this world who can;
If you won't want me oh so badly,
There are a lot who want me madly;
If you won't marry, that should fret me,
Cause there are others glad to get me;

I tell you boy friend, the world is packed
With those who'd grab me for a pack;
Men who are gorgeous and resplendent—
I who be very independent;
The trouble is, your handsome face is
The one I want to take me places;
Your kisses are the ones I'm wanting,
Although the others may be more taunting;
It's you I want to want me badly,
It's you that I would marry gladly;

And words of boys, I will admit,
Won't help my case a damned bit!
—ESTHER WAUGH

VACATION CONDUCT

When the university is closed for the holidays and the students begin to leave the campus to go home, they will all be put to a test much more severe than the last English book quizzes or lab exams which have been given as good-bye presents. All students of the university will be judged this time without their knowledge; they will be judged on the train, and in their own front parlors when they reach home, and in the family pew when they attend Easter services. Anxious relatives and friends will peer carefully at young collegiate faces and intently observe young collegiate antics. Dour strangers will frown on University of Kentucky students and believe the worst of them until they are shown better. And mental grades just as definite as A or B or C or D or E will be recorded.

Students realize the importance of attending an institution that is favorably recognized old home town by running his flivver into the sun to realize that the good will toward any university is determined almost wholly by the conduct of its students when not on university grounds. If Willie celebrates his return to the old home town by running his flivver into the Sweet Shoppe and doing the Beta hop in the church vestibule, then neighbors and family friends are prone to wonder, "Is this what he learns in trigonometry?" It takes very little of this sort of conduct to make one's opinion of the value of college training a little shaky.

Not only does unwise conduct lower the public estimation of a certain college, but it also degrades all colleges somewhat. It is best for every homegoing student to put himself on guard and by no doubtful word or action, make himself or the university liable to criticism.

ARE WE WORKING TOO HARD?

There are approximately 27 student organizations in McMaster to provide for the extra-curricular activities of a student body which numbers about five hundred. In addition to these organizations there are innumerable teams which are responsible for an enormous amount of time and energy. Strange as it might seem to some, there are other things to be considered in university life, and although we realize the painful shock that it will be to those who feel it, our attention is drawn to the fact that our only justification for being within these walls is the acquirement of an education.

It is quite possible that we are putting too much stress on social life and athletic prowess during the four fleeting years that we spend so riotously in the lap of learning. While we do not wish to discredit the aims of the athletic department, it seems to us that there is little hope of transforming a weakling into an athlete after he has reached the university age. Surely the development of the body is the task of the public and high school when the student's time is not so valuable and when he is still growing. Athletics are essential in a university, but they should be regarded as an assistance to study rather than one of its great obstacles.

Every year sees the inauguration of a few more societies and occasionally, but not often, one gives up the struggle and quietly drops out of existence. Since many of the organizations seem to exist entirely on the driving power of their executive and to all appearance arouse only an apathetic interest on the part of their members, perhaps it would be well if several would follow the example of those that have already preceded them into oblivion.

It is quite possible for many people to belong to eight or nine organizations and several teams and at the same time succeed in obtaining a degree, but surely we all realize that the knowledge required by examination standards is infinitesimal in comparison with a comprehensive understanding of our field of study. Only too soon will we be turned loose in a selfish and unsympathetic world where we will find it necessary to apply all our attainments to the struggle for a livelihood.

—McMaster Silhouette.
Even a peace treaty hasn't an effect as far-reaching as a dish of chicken on the board-house table.

Roaman' the Rinko

A production item that many Hollywood moguls have overlooked in the rush of grinding out cinematic entertainment is that talking picture actors must have something worth saying. Odd, isn't it, that they often forget that detail? However, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, maker of "Men Call It Love," now at the Ben Ali, did not slip on that score for the dialogue of Doris Aronson in among the very best that we have heard from the talking screen. "Men Call It Love" features Adolphe Menjou, Leila Hyams, and Norman Foster and it is obvious that, with good dialogue, the acting would be satisfactory. Edgar Selwyn, after his best job of "War Nurse," turns out excellent directorial work on "Men Call It Love." The picture moves swiftly, brilliantly, entertainingly, to a happy conclusion. Rena figures that everyone will like it. The best short subject we have seen in months is also on the Ben Ali program. It is a Metro Colorama short featuring Herman Timberg.

"Men of the World" is a Paramount picture which closes at the Kentucky tonight, presents William Powell in a usual performance in an unusually poor picture. It is really too bad for, in its original form, the script must have contained a splendid idea but the slowness of the direction and the commonplace dialogue combine to strip it of much entertainment. Carole Lombard, Wynne Gibson and Lawrence Gray are also in the cast which is, on the whole, very good. Miss Gibson is particularly striking. "Men of the World" tells of a suave blackmailer who preys upon Americans in their weak moments in Paris. He is a successful extortioner but falls by his own hand in the love racket. Powell does very well in the few good scenes which Director Richard Wallace allotted him. Having one of the very best voices on the screen, his performance is technically perfect. We fear that "Men of the World" will please only those who adore the star.

"A Tailor Made Man" William Haines will probably gain even more fans with "A Tailor Made Man," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture of the famous stage play now showing at the Strand. The script has been aptly adapted for Haines' exploitation. Rena also embraced us with her voracious laughter. Dorothy Jordan is cast in the female lead and she is very sweet as usual. "A Tailor Made Man" concerns a pants presser who, attired in full dress, crashes high society and has a lot of fun in doing of course, as in every farce, things come out all right. The picture shows a little obvious padding at times, but on the whole, it presents mirth provoking entertainment. And now for a problem over which no questions will be asked. Reward. Ashland 4348.

NOTICE—If the party who through mistake took a navy blue overcoat at the P. K. A. dance Saturday night with a Levy Bros. label will return it to George Walle care of Delta Chi house, no questions will be asked. Reward. Ashland 4348.

Elaborate Dance Given Saturday
The members of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity entertained with a beautiful formal dance Saturday evening at the Men's gymnasium from 8 until 12 o'clock.
The ballroom was artistically decorated with garnet and gold draperies and the blue and white streamers hung from the ceiling making a room within the room. Over the orchestra and in the center of the room lighted fraternity shields were hung. At the other end of the room a small clock records the time of each no-break. During the dancing varied colored lights flickered across the room.
A special event of the evening was the "floor show" given by professional entertainers; the Marsh sisters, radio singer, Ed Starbird, fiddler, gave a dance number and Murdock Williams, a piano act and Gertrude Williams, radio entertainer sang a most enjoyable selection of "Blues" songs.
After the show the orchestra broadcast a program directly from the gymnasium.

The Greeks Dance
It has long been our opinion that the warm sun of popularity is slowly sinking for the screaming, arm-waving singer of songs oh! so blue. The Placido did not seem to think so, however, nor did the 10,000 guests who attended their formal Saturday evening. The dance, given under the auspices of Tom Riley, was an innovation in entertainment, and—although we were disappointed to be very critical and we supposed you heard it before we began writing—it was, as we predicted, THE dance of the year. We told that the two young ladies of the dance saw rather a lot in one of our Greeks sincerely regretting that they had to leave Lexington immediately after the dance. And we suppose you heard the one about Murdock Williams.

The radiance evidently was a success, for a dear old lady in Hazard wires that she heard a bottle break—she would be familiar with the sound. Fortunately! Tom swapped the show as Real Estate Fags and even we had perfectly huge evening. We can only hope that floor shows, welcome signs, canopies, radiocasts do not become the gas men in the future. To argue that such frills are in terrible taste seems to be the best way out.

The Greekettes Dance
Every Kings who ever locked in the local coffin returned for the formal Saturday evening. The rubies also were present. The orchestra was better than the one at the Phipps affair but we really thought the 'I Love You Truly,' sung with improvised words to the everlasting glory of the Sisterhood, decidedly marvellous.

Do We Go Over?
The dear brothers tell us that our column is "running down the fraternity." The horror of it!

We Compare Ourselves
During the last week we have been making a study of the work of columnists on other collegiate publications and we are more than satisfied with the results of our investigation. The other gentlemen, we have found, spend most of their time discussing the causes and effects of worry and sundry other weighty subjects. More often than not a bit of poetry is thrown in which is so bad that the remainder of the column seems good by comparison. This is not a good paragraph.

Ordinary Occurrences
It occurs to us that if we knew people better we would like them more... that the majority of the intellectuals on the campus are fak-ers... that yellow crocuses are the only sign of Spring in which we

TSCHI! TSCHI!
Co-eds, Cigarettes, Cops, Fords—$15

A misinterpreted wise-crack of W. O. Brummett, 18 years old, caused him to hear the Lexington police judge deliver the 'U' to matron, fifteen dollars and costs, for breach of the peace and one dollar and costs for traffic violation.

As Brummett sat in the Payette county jail pondering on the solitude of the law for the welfare of society, he must have laughed sardonically: "Gink, if you smoke...." The minds of some men run in the same gutter, but cops....

Day after day, this had entered the portals of the city of Lexington unnoted. Few noticeable college reviews as it rambled through the Esplanade.

Now comes the cop's day of retribution. And how sweet it was! If Brummett had only stopped to think that minds of great men do not run in the same channel, he might have landed elsewhere than in the city repository for "hoosegow."

The blue and white of his machine and the clever and "in-discreet" whittlers proved to be downright immoral and indecent. We wonder, you we wonder, if we can't imagine, somewhere get back to originality without some ingenious person misinterpreting a wise crack.

have any faith... that the reference of a feature writer of The Kernel to "the ladies and gentlemen of dogdom" last week was absurd... that the band, for the first time in our memory, marched as well as the army in a recent afternoon drill... that a Phi Delta asked a prof if he could find a description of China in a book on the counties of central and eastern Europe... that the difference between real courtesy and kindness is non-existent... that the occurrences have ceased to occur.

Our Rival
Elwood Kruger, newest columnist for this already much columned sheet, says that he will not prevaricate, as we do, and say that the reason Strollers did not produce a play was not that they did not have any money but that it was because no plays were entered in the contest.

We have conferred with the gentlemen who hold high offices in the organization and we are assured that the reason they were not accepted was that, as we said before, Strollers did not have the money to pay for them. Even had the funds been available, 50 golden boys would have been absent, say the Strollers.

DAIRY MEN WILL MEET
The dairy farmers of central Kentucky will hold a meeting at the dairy building next Friday for the purpose of organizing an association to encourage the production of milk and to support the new Lexington milk ordinance, which prescribes new milk standards for the city.

At a meeting last week a temporary organization was formed, and a permanent association will be formed at the session April 3.

Contest Plans For Engineers Are Completed

Preliminary eliminations for the annual Howard Fayot speech award of $50 in gold, which has been awarded annually to the winner in the College of Engineering since 1925, will be held Friday night, May 8. All engineers who are taking the course in public speaking for engineers are eligible and will probably compete in the final of the series of contests. Prof. W. R. Sutherland, director of the contest, stated.

"The Engineers and the Planned Society" has been selected as the subject for orations of the contest of 1931. Nine speakers who will be selected in the first preliminary will compete on May 13, at which time three of the nine will be chosen to deliver their final addresses at the engineers' convocation on May 20.

Announcement of the winner will be made. Judges of the contest will be three faculty members. James Stark, Midway, was awarded the prize in 1926.
