That's odd

This campus is full of things that you can make odds on if you are the betting type of person. The hard part may be finding someone to take the bet in the first place. I have a weird feeling that bookies are widely scattered here in Lexington, maybe except on game days!

4 of 5 - Louisville gets beat by UK in their Pizza Bowl (Papa John's Stadium for you out-of-towners)

1 in 15 - Odds that you can find a 'social' girl that has, or has a friend so close that they call each other sisters, with larger breasts than God gave her.

1 in 10 - The new president of the University will be able to fundraise like Wethington did while in office.

1 in 3 - Odds that a car that passes you has Eminem turned up very loud in their car.

1 in 6 - Odds that a car passing you has Dave Matthews Band turned up very loud in their car.

1 in 4 - Odds that the car with Eminem playing loudly is a low riding Civic, Integra or Eclipse.

3 in 5 - Ratio of girls to guys on campus, and most of us are not good looking!

4 in 5 - Odds that you are going to go out tonight.

8 in 9 - Odds that you are in the major you started or that you will switch yours.

5 in 6 - Odds that a freshman will regret something they do over the weekend.

50 in 1 - Odds that UK will reach the Final Four this year.

20 in 2 - Odds that all incoming freshmen will return next semester.

100 in 1 - Odds that there will be no construction on campus next semester.

Professor creates civil rights bridge

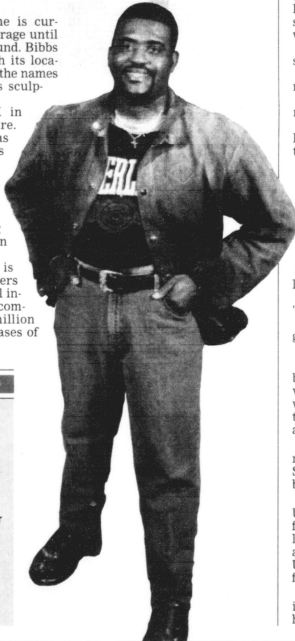

Building bridges: UK professor Garry Bibbs builds a bridge memorial to recognize Kentuckians who were important in the Civil Rights Movement

By Jennifer Sibenaller
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Bridges represent movement, transportation and perhaps even change. With all this in mind, UK Professor Garry Bibbs built a bridge that he said represents how 22 Kentuckians helped blacks overcome obstacles and led them to a better life. Bibbs's Bridge of Fame was revealed July 18 at the 40th anniversary celebration of the Kentucky Commission on Human Rights at The Gardens in Louisville. This 34 by 12 foot structure recognizes the 22 inductees of the Kentucky Civil Rights Hall of Fame who have performed outstanding deeds for civil rights. The bridge holds a mural-sized picture of each inductee on large wooden slots. Lyman T. Johnson, who fought for the desegregation of UK, is recognized on the Bridge of Fame. Johnson sued UK for admission in 1948. At the time, black students were enrolled at the University, but were taught at a different location than white students. Other famous faces found on the bridge include Civil Rights activist Anne Brade and the Director of Louisville Metropolitan Housing Coalition Suzy Post. Bibbs said the project was a way for him to honor the inductees. "I adopted the project. My objective was to find a way to spiritually and aesthetically give people reference to the idea of what each inductee represents," Bibbs said.

The Bridge of Fame is currently located in UK storage until a permanent home is found. Bibbs said he is satisfied with its location because he can add the names of new inductees to his sculpture. Bibbs came to UK in 1990 to teach sculpture. Ten years later, he has distinguished himself as a director of graduate studies. In addition to his work at the University, Bibbs was chosen to serve on the Planning Committee Commission on Human Rights. The commission is made up of 50 members who handle cases of civil injustice. Currently the commission uses its $2.1 million budget to take on 300 cases of discrimination a year.

Sandy Adams said she doesn't fit the description of a typical college student. "I am 42 years old, have three teen-age sons, and I stay busy with them. The other thing is that I don't fit the description of a regular college student," Adams said. She's in luck. Now, Adams doesn't have to drive to campus, look for parking and be in class by a certain time. All she has to do is log on to the University at her convenience. "The Virtual University eliminates sitting in a classroom with people half your age," Adams said. "Another advantage is that if a local college doesn't offer a course, then you can do it on line anytime of the day." Since Kentucky Community and Technical College System (KCTCS) and Kentucky Virtual University (KYVU) ventured together, Adams, along with 2000 other students can obtain degrees. On-line courses are not new to UK, but the partnership between KCTCS and KYVU allows virtual students to have more choices on line. Sue Patrick, director of marketing for KYVU, said that this on-line program is the first in the state to offer a complete associate degree. This fall the program offered over 150 courses that lead to master and doctoral degrees, as well as six

HONORED

Johnson elected to hall of fame

By Ashley York
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

One of UK's most memorable civil rights leaders entered the Civil Rights Hall of Fame at the 40th anniversary celebration of the Kentucky Commission on Human Rights ceremony in July. Of the 22 people nominated, the late Lyman T. Johnson, who fought to desegregate the University in 1949, was commemorated for his accomplishments. The excitement in Loretta Byars voice when asked about Johnson's induction provides enough inspiration to encourage those who don't know of his astounding accomplishments to research his contributions to the University, as well as contemporary America. "I was extremely pleased that Lyman was selected for the work that he did," said Byars, vice chancellor for Minority Affairs. "Even though what he did opened the doors to higher education for African Americans at UK, his impact was not just at UK, but for the entire commonwealth." Even though Byars didn't work directly with Johnson, her relationship with him was built upon something that many knew him for - his compassion and genuine concern for students. Byars said that even though Johnson's health deteriorated significantly as he got older, he returned every year, without fail, to the Black Student Union banquet. "He was so frail and could hardly walk because of arthritis, but the reason he came is because the students recognized him. He said it made him feel so good that students accelerated in school," Byars said. "He loved to come and hear what students were doing. Regardless of ailing health, Byars said Johnson always showed up. "He always had a message, no matter how frail he was. His mind was always sharp," she said. Byars said Johnson's name provides a positive image in most people's minds, however not for the most obvious reasons. "He wasn't as interested in taking classes as he was challenging the system," she said of Johnson's fight for desegregation. Johnson's struggle for equal rights at UK began in 1948 and became a landmark in UK's history when the University desegregated in 1949 after Johnson refuted the idea of the Day Law, which stated that blacks and whites could not be educated in the same facility. They could, however be enrolled in the University, but they had to be educated at a different location. Byars said Johnson's ideologies derived to desegregate UK because he felt that as a tax-paying citizen he too should be allowed to attend the same classes as white students. "He thought it was wrong that he couldn't go here," she said. "It was his moral conviction." What Byars said was a reason to challenge legalized segregation turned out to be one of UK's greatest feats. "Johnson wanted a fight and he got it," Byars said. In 1948 Johnson decided to apply to UK. He was accepted, but would have had to take his classes at Kentucky State University, where faculty would commute several days out of the week to instruct the predominantly black university. He took the case to court in 1948 where he filed a discrimination suit against UK and won. By the summer of 1949, 50 black students sat in UK classrooms for the first time in graduate and professional programs. Several years later in 1954, the undergraduate programs at UK became integrated. Even though Johnson enabled blacks to attend classes at UK, he decided to take another route. He attended classes at UK for a short while before he discontinued his education at UK. He later finished his master's degree at the University of Michigan and taught history at Louisville Central High School. In 1979, UK awarded Johnson an honorary degree to commend his efforts. Byars' explanation of Johnson's story provides an intriguing wish of her's: that everyone could have known Johnson for his true sincerity, will and determination to desegregate UK.

FILM

All style, no substance

While The Cell is visually stunning, plot and characters leave much to be desired

By Matt Mulcahey

SCENE EDITOR

Sometimes a film's production design and art direction can be so extraordinary that they overcome a mediocre, or even bad, script.

Films like Dark City and Blade Runner combated dazzling visuals against passable stories, and the visuals won out. The new film The Cell is a triumph of imagination and vision.

Unfortunately the aesthetic beauty and one-of-a-kind art direction can't overcome a story which exists only to provide the director the opportunity to come up with elaborate dreamscapes.

That director is Tarsem. Yes, just Tarsem. Renowned as one of the best commercial and video directors around, The Cell marks his feature debut.

The story revolves around a new psychotherapy tool that enables doctors to go into the subconscious of comatose patients and interact with them. So far, only one young boy has been used in the experiment and child therapist Catharine Deane (Jennifer Lopez) is the only one who can reach him.

mental health — goes into a seizure induced coma, the FBI asks Deane to travel into his subconscious and extract the location of his latest victim.

The visualization of Stargher's mind is one of the greatest examples of imagination ever put on film. A bleak, hellish nightscape of perversion, The Cell mixes Edward Munch's Dante's Purgatory, the director's own "Losing My Religion" video and Vincent Ward's What Dreams May Come, which suffered from the same style over substance undoing as The Cell.

The Cell achieves its unique look the old fashioned way, not through camera tricks or computer graphics, but through set design, costuming and makeup. But for all the artistic mastery and visceral delight The Cell provides, it forgets the most important ingredient of filmmaking: the story.

The serial killer aspects are tired and formulaic and the technical details are vague at best. The Cell seems to think by throwing some smart-sounding big words at the audience, they'll just accept the inadequate explanations.

The acting is competent from a good cast (it's always too nice to see Major League manager James Gammon in anything) with the exception of Vince Vaughn as FBI agent

Peter Novak. Vaughn is adept at playing smooth, charming characters like Trent in Swingers or Lester Long in Clay Pigeons, but he's abysmally miscast as a work-a-holic, burnt-out G-man.

If scenery and design interest you, I offer this recommendation: Rent The Cell and watch it on mute.

Less than meets the eye

Perhaps the makers of the new movie The Cell should have spent less time making the sets and designing costumes and more time working on the script. On the bright side, you do get to stare at Jennifer Lopez for two hours.

"Kings" more than just laughs

New movie offers not only great jokes but insight into black life and culture as well

By Luke Saladin

MANAGING EDITOR

There is a moment in The Original Kings of Comedy when the camera cuts away from the comics and films an audience member saying to his wife, "That's true, that's true."

Although the episode was small, its message echoed throughout the movie, which was a celebration of black humor and cultural difference. The featured comedians, although different in style, all draw from slice-of-life accounts and idiosyncrasies inherent in black culture.

Director Spike Lee filmed the performances during a Kings of Comedy tour stop in Charlotte, N.C. The show is currently one of the top-drawing arena acts in the country.

The film features four of today's hottest black comics, including D.H. Hughley, Cedric the Entertainer, Bernie Mac and Steve Harvey. The film succeeds in turning the otherwise somber state of race relations into laughter and, sometimes, understanding.

Harvey is the emcee and lifeline of the show, helping the audience adjust to the diverse style of the film's entertainers. He bridges the gaps between performers by, among other things, explaining why he likes old school music as opposed to rap.

Hughley starts the show off with his smooth, plaintive routine that could convince any doubter that Jesus was black.

Lee then highlights the contrasting sides of Cedric the Entertainer by showing him backstage reciting a Gregorian chant just before his routine, which includes his hilarious impression of a black people following whites to the Moon via Cadillac.

The one major departure from the black/white dynamic in the performances is Bernie Mac's mumbling rants on why parents shouldn't be afraid to beat their kids. Mac's ability to make his eyes appear to pop out of his head would leave some to wonder whether he is actually joking.

At once inclusive and true to its roots, all the material in the film serves a dual purpose: Black audience members find humor in familiarity, while white audience members laugh at the comics' carefully constructed explanations of black culture.

Case in point: Bernie Mac tells white audience members not to be offended by the word "muthafucka," because black people have the ability to use word as a noun, verb and modifier. Steve Harvey chimes in on the same note earlier in the film, explaining Titanic wouldn't work with an all-black cast as he turns over a table and mimics a survivor adrift among the freezing waters.

The film draws heavily from its predecessors — namely Edie Murphy Raw and Richard Pryor: Live in Concert — but is more complete because of the variety of talent.

But rest assured, The Original Kings of Comedy will not be remembered as a movie that mimicked the greats so much as it affirmed them and their legacy.

Source awards show goes sour as a result of fights

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — UPN will broadcast a rap music awards show next week even though the glittery hip-hop celebration was cut short by a bottle-throwing brawl.

Only three performances and a handful of awards were announced before The Source Hip-Hop Music Awards 2000 was shut down by fights. Some witnesses said some fights involved members of various rap groups, although police could not immediately confirm that.

"This is not a reflection of what hip-hop is really all about," rapper Coolio said. "Hip-hop is really about all the people coming together."

The show, sponsored by The Source magazine, mingled rap stars such as Grammy Award-winner Dr. Dre with mainstream celebrities. About 2,500 people were inside Pasadena Civic Auditorium, including U.S. Rep.

Maxine Waters, basketball star Shaquille O'Neal and boxing promoter Don King.

There were no arrests and no injuries, police said.

UPN said it will broadcast the show on Aug. 29 as scheduled. New scenes will be taped to include awards that were not presented, said Patti McTeague, a network spokeswoman.

"It's an undertaking that we're willing to make," she said.

UK DEFENSIVE PREVIEW

Defense not lost on Hal Mumme Pass

Mentioned honorably
Junior defensive end Dennis Johnson was named second team All-SEC last season.

PHOTO FURNISHED

By Will Messer
ASSISTANT SPORTSDAILY EDITOR

Coaches love to say the best offense is a good defense. But when it comes to UK Football coach Hal Mumme, the offensive guru believes the best defense is a good offense.

At other collegiate football programs, this could be a problem, but not at UK. Defensive Coordinator Mike Major agrees completely with Mumme's scheme.

Major runs a gutsy risk-taking defense that routinely isolates its cornerbacks and greets opposing offenses with eight man fronts.

This means the defense either makes a big play or gets burned, but doesn't stay on the field long, which is the whole idea. Mumme believes if the defense does its job, then his offense should have no trouble outscoring opponents.

But this year, UK's defense could be different. Major will still run the same scheme, but this is the most talented and experienced defense he's had to work with yet.

So if everything works accordingly, then the defense could be making a lot of big plays and only giving up a few. Let's take a look.

Defensive line:
Junior Dennis Johnson is still working to meet lofty expectations, but after a solid sophomore season and an impressive spring, he looks ready to establish himself as one of the game's best defensive ends.

Senior Matt Layow will start opposite of Johnson. Layow isn't a star, but he is experienced and consistent. Sophomore Otis Grigsby and junior Jermaine White will provide depth.

Although the line is stacked at end, the tackle position is another story. Heralded freshman Dewayne Robertson and senior Grayson Smith are the tentative starters. Robertson has impressed coaches with his size (6-foot-3, 308-pounds) and strength. Smith is undersized at 246-pounds, but has impressed coaches with his quickness.

Jeremy Caudill, another highly touted freshman, will see playing time at tackle, as will junior Derrick Johnson, who moved from offensive guard to defensive tackle this year.

Linebackers:
Senior Marion McCree is back for his senior season at outside linebacker. Although undersized at 198-pounds, McCree utilizes his speed to make big plays. Junior Ronnie Riley has made strides and will be an experienced and talented backup.

Juniors Ryan Murphy and

Jamal White will split time at middle linebacker. Murphy was last year's starter and is more experienced, but Major calls White the team's best athlete. Expect White to see a lot of action on third downs and in passing situations.

Junior Chris Gayton replaces the graduated Jeff Snedegar at outside linebacker and will be backed up by sophomore Mike Beshara. Gayton is a converted safety and will bring speed and pass coverage skills to the position.

Secondary:
The secondary is loaded with talent and experience. Seniors Eric Kelly and Kenneth Grant return at cornerback. Grant has been hampered by an ankle sprain and may not be ready for the University of Louisville game. If he isn't, then senior strong safety Willie Gary will start at corner.

Sophomore Derrick Tatum and redshirt freshman Octavianus Bond are the backups. If Grant isn't healthy for the U of L game, then junior Patrick Wiggins will start at strong safety and junior Anthony Wajda will start at free safety. Sophomores David Johnson and Quentus Cumby are adequate backups.

Freshmen Leonard Burress and Earvon Flowers have impressed coaches and will see playing time at corner.

Chimps inherit more than wind

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Six chimps have a great new reason to monkey around: They're filthy rich. An 83-year-old Danish woman who had no living relatives has bequeathed $60,200 to the half-dozen chimpanzees at the Copenhagen Zoo. In her will, Elisabeth Christensen donated the money to the animal park with a specific requirement that the money benefit the zoo's chimps.

Christensen included the monkeys in her will in memory of her daughter, who suffered a fatal illness 50 years ago and spent her last weeks visiting the chimps at the zoo every day.

"We will use it to make improvements and modernization of their cage," the zoo's financial manager Soeren Glud said Wednesday. Judge Christian Nottevisen read the will to the present occupants of the glass and concrete cage — Jimmy, Trunte, Fifi, Trine, Grimm and Gig — on Monday after he had informed zoo officials.

The aces watched the judge with curiosity, but they rapidly lost interest.

The heirs, however, behaved better than many people. Nottevisen had seen in court during readings of the will, the judge said. "They didn't start fighting."

Boldly going...

Music is out of this world, literally

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — Musician Jack Gladstone isn't a household name, he doesn't sell out arenas and his albums aren't at the top of the charts. But he's popular in outer space.

The Blackfeet Indian songwriter recently received word that an astronaut took a copy of his "Buffalo Cafe" compact disc with him on the space shuttle Atlantis.

"If you could say your music is 'out of this world,'" wrote astronaut Scott J. Horowitz in a note to Gladstone.

Air Force Lt. Col. Horowitz took Gladstone's music with him on the 98th night of the space shuttle Atlantis, which orbited the Earth 155 times in May.

Horowitz was introduced to Gladstone's music when he took a trip through Montana two summers ago.

Horowitz and his wife enjoyed one of Gladstone's evenings of lyrics and lore in Glacier National Park and bought a CD. Along with the letter and a photo, Horowitz returned the original CD. Gladstone plans to have it framed.

With Gore and Bush up to bat, can we trust political antics?

To the editor:

We are now 75 days out from the most important election year since 1968. The conventions are over and the corporations that staged them can go back to their altruistic goal of getting larger.

The GOP proved once and for all that they are the inclusive party by saying on talk shows that they are the inclusive party. The Democrats proved that, unlike Bill, their current nominee still has sex ...

with his own wife. So with only a small percentage of precincts reporting, the media has declared Gore the winner. This is due mostly to his post-convention bounce, which gives him the insurmountable lead of one point (with a three point margin of error).

But Al will nevertheless continue to press his anti-corporation theme. His main problem right now is how to use the contributions he receives from big oil, big tobacco and big pharmaceuticals to bash big oil, big tobacco and big pharmaceuticals. At least George W. is using his contributions from corporations to implement his fail-safe strategy of hiring people to think up catchy alliterative campaign slogans.

The debates will be here soon enough. There probably won't be much talk of campaign finance reform, although I certainly do not want my money going to finance this stuff. Besides, Gore's campaign has already put into practice a bold initiative of complete government financing, although it happens to be the government of China. Oh well, baby steps.

The power of feminine wiles

I remember as a little girl being told I could do absolutely anything I wanted when I got older. I was also told I could perform any task no matter how difficult if I set my mind to it. However I soon found, as I grew older, that this is a man's world.

I admit there are drawbacks to being women. One being that we don't have the ability to write our names in the snow. But, being women means we can bear children, use our feminine wiles to get whatever we want. Wait. Back up a minute, use our feminine wiles to get whatever we want?

That's right. Feminist power has taken on a new cloth and bought a purse and shoes to match. We have all heard that our American society we hold so dear is run by men. While that belief is not unfounded in most circles of history, a new realm of feminist power is quickly taking the reins.

The first few signs of feminism made their way eagerly through our lives in such forms as Valerie Solanas and her S.C.U.M. Manifesto, S.C.U.M. Manifesto stands simply for Society for Cutting Up Men. Solanas felt an eternal loathing for the common housewife. Her policies and beliefs were based on the hatred of the female in society whose role revolved solely around the kitchen and under the male's boot.

The fierce fire of feminine anger continued to grow stronger and bolder throughout the course of time. However, now another form of feminine strength has come to the main burner on the stove. No longer are our heroines all bronze and brain. They are now also sexy. Instead of changing society through violence, rage and terror, we are now working through the ideals of sex.

One of the major contributors to this shift in roles is the bold and perhaps brash cast of HBO's "Sex and the City." The four women who are currently filling the lead roles on the show make for a powerful combination. Each character is full of stamina, willing to give all and do all to see their careers advance while their social lives play mistress to their goals.

The concept of staying single and focusing on career as opposed to marriage and children is not a new one. If woman has seen any of the James Bond movies she knows that all she has to do to catch 007's eye is wink and shake a martini. Yet this theme seems to have taken America by storm. Career-minded single women are blooming in industry as well as boosting the economy to new heights.

Other such shows that proudly display women in the driver's seat and not the kitchen are Showtime's "Soul Food" and NBC's "Providence." Networks are picking up on the selling concept of strong women in strong roles without using men as head of the family. Among the wide variety of books to join women in their quest of self-discovery and progress are Helen Fielding's Bridget Jones's Diary and Melissa Bank's The Girls' Guide to Hunting and Fishing.

As women of today jump on the bandwagon of using sexual appeal to lure progress as well as men, we might be forgetting what it means to have feminine power. We have power in the fact that we don't feel the urge to prove ourselves to other women that we can do something. The days of rage for men appear to have lessened in compared to that of the rage for career and self-worth.

We are far from forgetting the first true pioneers in the women's movement for power and acknowledgment. However, as we begin our struggle to overcome societal stereotypes of common housewives, die hard feminists and/or lascivious eye-candy, do not forget one thing. While we may not be able to pee standing up, at least we know that we have the smarts to first find a bathroom.

Fight the awful urge to be an educated idiot

School is once again upon us. For those of us that went home for the summer, school starting again meant getting to say goodbye to summer jobs. While I can't say that I am terribly sad to give up working two jobs for a three-month stint, I will miss some of the people I worked with and the lessons I learned from them.

It was at my second job of the day working as a fuel attendant at a gas station that I learned a lesson that should apply to all college students: Don't be an educated idiot.

"Educated idiot" was a term that some of the guys at the station had for a certain type of person that pulled into our establishment. These people were the ones you could tell were intellectually smart but couldn't tell up from down in the real world.

The bone-headed stunts that educated idiots pulled at the station I worked at could fill a whole book, much less a column. The easiest way to classify one is as someone who has read War and Peace but has never cracked open the owner's manual for their automobile. This causes all types of problems.

For instance, educated idiots often pull up in nice fancy cars with their graduate schools plastered on their rear view windshield, only to find their gas tank on the wrong side. Now there's no shame in this; people pull up to the wrong side all the time. An educated idiot though, instead of turning their car around will actually try to make the hose reach and leak gas all over the place.

To keep from joining the ranks of this not-so-illustrious group, it's time to start thinking outside the realm of classes and homework. A degree will do you no good without some regular know-how. I'm not saying we all need to become master mechanics or skilled plumbers, but knowing some basics is just a

IN OUR OPINION

Play by the rules or else

Turning on the bike lanes a no-no

Euclid finally got its face-lift this summer. The sight offered a welcomed change to the many students who prefer to travel the road via two wheels. Bike lanes on the left and right sides were installed as part of the new plan to help students get safely to classes. No longer is there the need to coast along side-sidewalks dodging pedestrians and light poles.

Those in the past who bravely chose to fight traffic and actually struggle with driving in the streets will find things are changing for the better. No longer is there the fear of being run over or facing the constant beeping of horns from impatient drivers.

Oops, wait, hold that last thought. What is this flying through the air that bikers are still facing the same dilemma of dealing with traffic? While the new Euclid bike lanes are supposed to be for bikes only, not all motorists are following traffic laws. Travis Manley, commander of communications for UK transportation, said that he has seen cars using the bike lanes as turn lanes.

Turn lanes? The lanes are meant for the safety of students in their passage, not for the cars to veer off and turn. While the notion of using that vast amount of space is appealing to motorists one would assume that the possibility of hitting a biker is too great a risk.

Before the bike lanes, most bikers used the sidewalks. In order for a biker to get hit at any other place than an intersection, a car would have had to run off the road and jump the curb. While bikers continued to travel among the pedestrian walkways, they accepted the problems that came with it. Despite this being illegal and endangering pedestrians, it beat trying to fight with Lexington traffic.

Another factor to quash the irritating use of motorists forgetting themselves for moments of turning time is the harsh reality that the lanes themselves were not made large enough for vehicles. To avoid hitting a turning car in one of these lanes one would have to jet around the vehicle by sliding swiftly into the opposite lane.

This quite possibly could end in even more chaos than previously imagined.

Keeping this in mind: Students and motorists alike should not let these new bike lanes lull them into a false sense of security. All that it would take to cause a car to hit a bike now is someone reaching down to change radio stations and swerving out of their lane.

It is possible to find a way to bring peace to the co-existence between bikers and motorists.

It is called a bike lane, not a turn lane.

good idea. If you don't know how to check your oil or your tires, learn. Dorm food getting old? Take a cooking class. If the toilet is making funny noises, take the back off and have a look around.

One of the biggest problems many college students have is educational snobbery. We think we're so much better than everyone just because we have a degree. I am not accusing every student of having this attitude but I think it is pretty safe to say everyone knows people who hold that view.

However, not going to college does not imply stupidity nor does going guaranteed intelligence. Many of the men I worked with had a better grasp on foreign policy issues and economics than half my UK peers.

Just like a lot of so-called "intellectuals" look down at people who don't have a degree, people who don't have a degree often look down on smart people who don't bother to pay attention to every day things.

The guys at the station made fun of educated idiots on almost a daily basis. (They had other names for them too, but I've chosen not to use them in this column.) With me being the college kid heading back to UK, the guys were always asking, "You aren't going to become an educated idiot are you?"

I am doing my best not to be. As a man that has often been accused of having little common sense, I am preaching as much to myself as everyone else.

College smarts only get you so far. It doesn't matter if you have three doctorates from Harvard; if you can't check the air in your tires chances are you're gonna get laughed at behind your back.
