

National Democratic Women

Let Senator Barkley and his fellow supporters of the Tammany Sachem say all they truthfully can in his behalf; but in all earnestness we protest against misrepresenting Woodrow Wilson for the purpose of advancing Alfred E. Smith in large measure the antithesis of all that Woodrow Wilson was or for which he stood.

Senator Barkley Misrepresents Woodrow Wilson

WILSON'S VETO OF VOLSTEAD ACT.

In his zeal to elevate to the Presidency of the United States a Sachem of Tammany Hall, the bitter foe of Woodrow Wilson, the greatest of latter day Democrats, Senator Alben W. Barkley, if he be correctly reported in the public prints, is again and again making statements concerning Woodrow Wilson's position on the liquor problem unwarranted by any official act or public utterance of that great President with which we are acquainted.

Senator Barkley seeks to promote the candidacy of the Tammany Sachem, idol, leader and hope of the ultra wets by saying that "Governor Smith is no wetter than Woodrow Wilson, James M. Cox and John W. Davis." In 1920 the people knew this statement to be true of James M. Cox and registered their votes accordingly. In 1924 they suspected it to be true of John W. Davis and he was defeated at the polls. But without other evidence than he has yet produced the loyal friends of Woodrow Wilson regard Senator Barkley's statement as false and resent his willingness to justify his present advocacy of Governor Smith by this statement that he must know, if believed, would lower Woodrow Wilson in the esteem and affection of vast numbers of the American people. If we Democrats, now in the wilderness of internecine strife, have no immediate future, we protest against being robbed of our glorious past.

WOODROW WILSON
The White House, October 27, 1919.
It is perfectly clear to a layman and ought to be clear to a United States Senator that Woodrow Wilson objected to carrying over a wartime measure a year after the war had ended and the Army and Navy had been demobilized.
