Welcome fall!

Hello, Wildcats! It is with great pride that we bring you the fall 2011 issue of Kentucky Alumni magazine. Fall? How did fall get here so fast? I guess time really does fly when you're having fun...

As you know, we have a new president here at UK. Dr. Eli Capilouto became the 12th president on July 1. He's our cover story for this issue and I hope you take a few minutes to read it. I had a wonderful conversation with him, and that's really what it was, a conversation more than an interview. I found him to be sincere and gracious. He is very serious about education and the responsibility of leading the University of Kentucky. As we were wrapping up the conversation, I told him that he has changed my opinion of the University of Alabama-Birmingham. I jokingly (sort of) explained that prior to meeting him, every time I heard or read "UAB," I would get slightly ill because all I could think about was the 2004 NCAA Tournament. (Need I say more?) Turns out we were at that game — cheering for different teams, obviously. However, he assures me that he is now a full-fledged member of Big Blue Nation. So, having met President Capilouto, I now have much more pleasant thoughts about UAB.

Also in this issue, you will get to know alums Mat Saunders, who leads an adventurous life as an archeologist, and Ceal Barry, who was a member of the women's basketball team at UK during a defining time in collegiate athletics. We spotlight alumni who serve their constituents. Plus, check out our 2011 Distinguished Service and Burch Award recipients.

Finally, I don't know about you, but I am ready for some Wildcat football! Below is the 2011 schedule. Start making tailgating plans accordingly. I can't wait!

We hope you enjoy this issue of Kentucky Alumni magazine. As always, your feedback is welcome and appreciated.

With Pride in Blue

New to the Blue

About 10 years ago, when my daughter was 13 years old, she insisted I watch with her, the movie, “Gladiator.” I didn’t know why she asked but, looking for a moment to bond with my daughter, I agreed. At the end of the movie, I turned to her and asked, “What was the most important statement that Russell Crowe made to his followers?”

She didn’t know, but I persisted and asked again, “Please, as a parent, tell me what you thought was the most important statement.”

She said, “Oh, I got it ... On my command, unleash hell.”

After a short laugh and some time to compose myself, I said, “No. The most important question was when he turned to his followers and asked, ‘Why are we here?’”

I asked myself the same question when I decided to uproot my wife and our two dogs from our home in Alabama. And it is the same question I continue to ask our faculty, staff and students every day. A continual assessment of our mission to serve is critical to our beloved institution if we hope to move our university and the Commonwealth toward a better future.

My recruitment to the University of Kentucky began more than 10 years ago when I heard President Lee T. Todd, Jr. speak at a national conference on the importance of land-grant institutions. His devotion to UK and his commitment to the Commonwealth immediately signaled to me that UK was not just another university — it was a special place with special people.

Before I was announced as the university’s preferred candidate, my wife, Mary Lynne, and I traveled to Lexington to visit UK and the city we now call home. Dressed to blend in, we set out across campus for six hours to discover what it was that people loved about the University of Kentucky. We met students; we spent time at William T. Young Library; and we visited the James W. Stuckert Career Center. The fervor I heard in each person’s voice confirmed that UK is more than an institution — it is a family.

Prior to my first day in office, I sat down with nearly 60 faculty from colleges and departments across campus. When I asked what made them proud to be a part of the University of Kentucky, one of the first things they talked about was our incredible student body. Since my arrival, I have had the opportunity to spend time with our new students, and I am proud to say that we have, once again, recruited the most academically prepared class in our institution’s history.

Now that we have settled into Maxwell Place, I have redoubled my effort to understand our institution, community and state. I have met with more of our world-class faculty, spent time with our devoted physical plant staff and identified key community and business leaders who can expand our capacity to serve Lexington and make it a great place to raise a family and start a business. Integrating their insights about the university and where we see ourselves in the future is a key component of my tenure.

And, finally, I have been fortunate enough to spend time with the University of Kentucky’s extended family, our alumni and friends who continue to support our mission in a multitude of ways. You are unpaid recruiters who share the countless opportunities UK can offer to the best students in your community. You are volunteer consultants who provide crucial feedback and creative approaches to issues facing our institution and state. You are private fundraisers who generously contribute to the university, both fiscally and in-kind. And you are our extended family with an unparalleled hospitality that has warmed our hearts.

At every turn, I grow more enthusiastic and optimistic about the road ahead. By working together with the creative minds at our university, our devoted partners in the community, policy leaders throughout our state and our committed alumni and friends, we will reach our shared aspirations.

I will continue to visit you in quarterly editions of Kentucky Alumni magazine. You can also follow our work through my blog, uknow.uky.edu/president, or on UKNow, the university’s official news website, at uknow.uky.edu. I look forward to our future together and seeing you at some of our athletic events or one of our many academic or fine arts programs.

Until next time; continue seeing blue, Wildcats!

Eli Capilouto
President

Dean of College of Engineering to resign

Thomas Lester, dean of the UK College of Engineering, will resign as dean of the college effective June 30, 2012. Lester, who has served as dean since 1990, is currently the longest serving dean at the university. He has not finalized any future plans at this time.

Prior to his current appointment, Lester served as professor and chairman of mechanical engineering at Louisiana State University from 1983 to 1990, and as professor of nuclear engineering at Kansas State University from 1975 to 1983.

Lester is a UK Fellow and has made personal contributions to establish and endow the Donald L. and Gertrude L. Lester Professorship in Mechanical Engineering. ■

New dean for the UK College of Medicine

Dr. Frederick C. de Beer, longtime University of Kentucky faculty member and current chairman of the Department of Internal Medicine, has accepted the position of dean of the College of Medicine and vice president for Clinical Academic Affairs. He succeeds Dr. Jay Perman who was named president of the University of Maryland in 2010.

de Beer received his medical degree from the University of Pretoria, South Africa. His postgraduate education was at the Royal Postgraduate Medical School, London. Prior to coming to the United States in 1989, he served as professor of medicine at the University of Stellenbosch, South Africa. In 1993, he was named chief of the UK Division of Endocrinology and Molecular Medicine. In 2003, he was appointed as the Jack M. Gill Professor and chairman of the Department of Internal Medicine. ■

UK buys building to relocate Department of Art

UK has purchased a 100,000-square-foot building to become the new home for the UK Art Department. The university acquired the privately owned former tobacco warehouse, currently known as University Lofts, located adjacent to campus on Bolivar Street.

This approach should not only meet the needs of UK's art students, faculty and staff, but will also save money in necessary renovations to Reynolds Building No. 1. University Lofts has recently been renovated, so it is in much better condition than Reynolds Building No. 1. Although University Lofts will need some modification, it is anticipated that purchasing and converting this building is a more logical, fiscally responsible option.

If the project goes as planned, UK students could be painting, sculpting and drawing in the renovated facility as early as the fall of 2013.

"The renovations required to accommodate the College of Fine Arts in University Lofts is not very complicated," says Bob Wiseman, vice president for Facilities Managements. "We intend a wide-open floor plan with institutional HVAC systems and the necessary air exhaust systems for certain fine arts needs, new lighting, modern accessible rest rooms and other amenities that will optimize the space for our art students.

"But most importantly," he says, "the University Lofts building can be a safer building. It is on a well-lit major road across the street from campus and close to other housing and businesses frequented by students. The building itself has a good roof, windows and exterior walls, sound stairways, solid electrical supply and a good elevator; and it does not have the safety, access and site drainage issues associated with the Reynolds Building."

The building will include class space for an art studio, faculty studios, graduate studios and spaces for advanced undergraduate work. The Barnhart Gallery, the primary exhibition space for students in Reynolds Building No. 1, would also be relocated to the University Lofts structure.

Before it can be converted to house UK's art students and their paintings and sculptures, obligations to leased tenants must be met, says Ben Crutcher, associate vice president for Auxiliary Services. "UK inherited those obligations to the residing tenants, including several leases that will sporadically lapse over the next year," he says.

The University Lofts property also includes on-site parking, as well as an associated 85-space parking lot across Bolivar Street from the Lofts. The addition of proximate parking is a welcome amenity, as the existing Reynolds facility has extremely limited parking. Additionally, University Lofts is located adjacent to existing campus and city transit routes which will further enhance the students' accessibility. ■

Faculty member elected to UK Board of Trustees

Irina Voro, associate professor of piano in the UK College of Fine Arts School of Music, has been elected as faculty representative to the UK Board of Trustees for a three-year term, which will expire June 30, 2014. She fills the seat on the board that was held by Everett McCorvey of the UK College of Fine Arts, whose term ended June 30.

Voro is an internationally renowned teacher of the arts and creativity. Winner of an international music performance prize, she has also performed solo concerti with philharmonic orchestras on four continents and given solo piano recitals in 15 states and 11 countries. Her teaching awards include the U.S. Presidential Administration's Distinguished Teacher Award, the Kentucky Music Teachers' Association Teacher of the Year, the UK Provost Award for Outstanding Teaching and a Teacher Who Made a Difference. ■

UK receives its largest research funding award

The National Institutes of Health (NIH), the largest government funding source for biomedical research in the United States, has awarded $20 million to the University of Kentucky to move research discoveries from the laboratory to bedside more quickly.

The five-year funding, awarded through the NIH's institutional Clinical and Translational Science Awards (CTSA) program, is the largest research funding award ever received by UK. It will be used to support research at the UK Center for Clinical and Translational Science (CCTS), making it part of a select national biomedical research consortium. The UK center — the only designated CTSA in Kentucky — is led by Dr. Philip Kern, associate provost for clinical and translational science, who will serve as principal investigator of the program.

Translational research, referred to as “bench to bedside,” means turning lab findings into preventions, treatments and cures through collaborations across academic units with interdisciplinary research teams.

“Probably the most important research that has been neglected on a national basis is that there are some standards and best practices that just don't get disseminated and don't get used as effectively as they should,” says Dr. Michael Karpf, UK executive vice president for Health Affairs. “Figuring out how to change that, how to get physicians, patients and others to comply with what we know are best standards is a critically important issue. That's going to be something we are going to emphasize in multiple different ways. We'll emphasize that through the grant and some of the partnerships we'll develop.”

CTSA funding will support infrastructure and the Clinical Research Development and Operations Center at UK Albert B. Chandler Hospital, where patients participate in clinical research studies. It also will be used for educational programs for future investigators, for community engagement, to fund research pilot grants and an informatics program. ■

UK receives grant to help reduce reliance on imported oil

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of Energy issued UK one of eight federal grants to study the reduction of imported oil to the United States. UK received $6.9 million as part of the Obama administration's comprehensive plan to address rising gas prices, and to fund research and development projects that will support the production of biofuels, bioenergy and high-value biobased products from a variety of biomass sources.

UK's project is to improve the economics for biorefineries by using on-farm processing to convert biomass to a mixture of butanol, ethanol, acetone and organic acids. The product can then be easily transported to a biorefinery for further processing. The project will integrate input from experts in a variety of disciplines, including plant and soil scientists, horticulturists, chemical engineers, and economists. Principal investigator Sue Nokes, professor in the UK Biosystems and Agricultural Engineering Department, says the bulk of the grant will be used to study the process of growing switchgrass and miscanthus to create biofuel for farm machinery. ■

African American Encyclopedia back on track

The Kentucky African American Encyclopedia (KAAE) project, based at the University of Kentucky, has new life thanks to a contribution from philanthropist Tom Brumley, whose interest in the project goes back several years. The KAAE, published by the University Press of Kentucky, will provide a comprehensive volume of research on the black experience in the Commonwealth, including entries on the individuals, events, places, organizations, movements and institutions which have shaped the state's history since its origins. It is believed that Kentucky could very well be the first state to have an encyclopedia like this one. ■

Public Health launches national coordinating center

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation awarded a $3.2 million, three-year grant to the UK College of Public Health to create the National Coordinating Center for Public Health Services and Systems Research (PHSSR). The grant will help accommodate a growing field that supplies public health officials and policymakers with the data they need to make decisions about how health departments should be financed, staffed and structured. This research is important as state and local health departments across the country face difficult choices due to budget cuts and reductions in staff, programs and services.

One goal of the new center is to grow this field of research by coordinating current PHSSR investments, supporting real-world applications, and strengthening the capacity of researchers and practitioners. Another key goal is to determine the future direction of the field's research initiatives, and translate that research into practice. The National Coordinating Center will also work to increase the visibility of the work and attract other funders to the field.

“In this era of health care reform and tight government budgets, now is the ideal time to take a hard look at how valuable public health dollars are being spent and how we can best spend those dollars in the future to ensure the greatest, most positive impact on the population,” says Dr. F. Douglas Scutchfield, director of the National Coordinating Center for Public Health Services and Systems Research and the Peter B. Bosomworth Professor of Health Services Research and Policy at UK. ■

Warren Rosenthal '47 Seeing blue and making a difference...

Founder of national restaurant chains gives in appreciation for what he has received

When students graduate from the University of Kentucky, their career paths often take them in interesting directions. Certainly that could be said for Warren Rosenthal '47 BE, who managed to launch a business career with three small diners in Lexington and parlayed them into three Kentucky-based restaurant chains with more than 1,500 locations in 37 states and two other countries.

Jerry's Drive-In, Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppe and Fazoli's are more than just names of successful restaurants. They are part of the modern American vernacular and are known to millions. But perhaps not as well-known is the quiet philanthropy of Rosenthal to many worthy causes including his alma mater.

"Warren Rosenthal is a UK alum who has had phenomenal success in business," observes Mike Richey '73 '79 AG, UK vice president for Development. "His extraordinary entrepreneurial accomplishments are exceeded only by his generosity and his heart for helping others in transformational ways. His success story is intriguing, and his volunteerism and philanthropic giving are inspiring."

A Kentucky native

Rosenthal is a fourth generation Kentuckian and a child of the Great Depression. He spent his early life in Paducah. His great-grandfather was a riverboat captain and had settled there. His grandfather ran a grocery store and a cigar factory. And his father had a wholesale dry goods business.

"Paducah was a wonderful place to grow up," Rosenthal remembers fondly. "It was a little town of 35,000 people and there was no need to lock our doors night or day. I could ride my bike anywhere in town and I made great friends in my childhood and youth. And the Boy Scouts were an important part of my early teens. Life was most enjoyable."

But when Rosenthal was age 15, his mother died of pneumonia. She was only 38 years old. "From that time on," he recalls, "it was just my brother, dad, grandma and me."

When it came time for Rosenthal to attend college, there was no question about where he would go for his first two years of study. His father and some other townspeople had founded Paducah Junior College several years earlier in 1932. "Many people couldn't afford to send their children away to school," he explains. "There were 300 students there when I attended. Funds were not paid by the city, but were raised in the community and through tuition.

"Dad was prepared to pay my way through junior college, but I told him, 'No. I will pay for it.' The cost was $90 a semester."

A top secret Army cryptographer

After finishing two years of college, Rosenthal volunteered for service in the U.S. Army. The year was 1943 and World War II was raging. He trained at Camp Lee, Va., and was then assigned to the signal corps as a cryptographer. He spent 33 months in India assigned to Gen. Joseph Stilwell's headquarters.

"I had a great experience with Stilwell," Rosenthal reflects. "I was his top secret communicator night and day. I coded and decoded messages all the time. Of course, I couldn't talk about the content of those messages with anybody. And at a certain point, I began getting communiqués about something called ‘the Manhattan Project.’ I didn’t know what that was until later when the atomic bombs were dropped.”

Rosenthal didn’t receive clearance to return home until several months after the war ended. “I got the coded message myself that I was being ordered back to the states. It said I was to return by ‘first available water.’ But when I decoded it,” he says with a grin, “I wrote ‘first available air.’”

“Even by plane, it still took six or seven days to get back to the U.S. since we couldn’t fly overnight for security reasons. We therefore had to hop-skip through several countries on the way home. I finally landed in West Palm Beach, Fla., in February of 1946.”

A veteran establishing a life and a career

One of the first things Rosenthal did when he returned to civilian life was to travel back to Virginia where he had completed his Army training. During that time, a local family there had invited the young enlisted men to their home for meals and fellowship. Rosenthal visited the family again and became reacquainted with their daughter, Betty Markhoff. Several months later, they were married in August 1946.

After returning from the war, Rosenthal also wanted to continue his education. He enrolled at the University of Kentucky and graduated with a degree in commerce in 1947. His plan was to return to Paducah and go into business with his father. “In those days, you did what your father told you,” he chuckles. “And he told me to come back home and work with him. He wanted to open small department stores in communities of 6,000 to 8,000. But three months after I went back home, he died at age 50 of pancreatic cancer. I had no desire to stay in Paducah after his death.”

At first, Rosenthal thought he would accept a job in New York, N.Y. He and Betty Rosenthal traveled to New York to investigate the possibility. He was offered a large salary for his first year of work and a full partnership in the second year with an even larger salary. The business was a manufacturer’s agency for men’s and children’s hosiery.

“The owner was 64 years old and wanted someone to carry on the business,” Rosenthal relates. “I would have to spend six months of the year on the road and the other six months in New York. Even with the kind of salary he was offering, we wouldn’t be able to live in the city. I would have to commute maybe an hour each way every day. I just couldn’t fathom committing to that kind of life. I told Betty we were going back to Kentucky.”

Rosenthal had another job possibility in Louisville selling life insurance. He and his wife bought train tickets to take them from New York to Louisville with an overnight stop in Lexington. They wanted to visit friends in Lexington, one of whom had rented them an apartment while Rosenthal was a student at the University of Kentucky.

“Jerry Lederer loved young people and we had become good friends,” he remembers. “I stopped by his office to say hello and he asked me where I was going. I told him my plan was to sell life insurance. He said, ‘Don’t do that. Come into business with me.’”

The start of something big

Rosenthal accepted his older friend’s offer, and over time, bought one-third of his business with the option to purchase the remainder upon his friend’s death. Lederer was in the restaurant business.

New Developments

“He had one tan porcelain building with eight stools on South Limestone Street facing the UK campus where McDonald’s is located today,” Rosenthal remembers. “It was called Jerry’s and sold 15-cent hamburgers. He also had two five-cent hamburger stands called White Taverns.”

Rosenthal brought innovation to the restaurants which quickly resulted in success. “I introduced curb service in Lexington,” he relates. “I had observed curb service in Paducah. We tried it out at South Lime and then at the location on Main Street across from Henry Clay High School and finally at the location at the Beltline and North Broadway. It was a success. By this time, all the restaurants were called Jerry’s, and with the popularity of curb service, I then added Drive-In to the name.”

He also brought other new practices to the business which were working elsewhere in the country, including the double-decker hamburger which he dubbed the Fat Boy, later changing its name to the J-Boy. Rosenthal and Lederer started franchising and other Jerry’s Drive-Ins began opening around central Kentucky. As competition from a larger similar restaurant chain became fierce, Rosenthal decided to begin advertising on television, a new medium at the time.

The colonel

Lederer and Rosenthal were acquainted with Harland Sanders.

“He walked into our office in 1956,” Rosenthal recalls. “He was not known as colonel then, nor did he wear white. He had a restaurant in Corbin and he said to Jerry, ‘I’ve got it all ready to franchise, except for the boxes such as the ones you use. How do you do your boxes?’ he wanted to know.

“I told him how we positioned the food in the box. ‘We put the roll in the back corner, the coleslaw in front of that with a wooden spoon and paper napkin, fries on the bottom, chicken or sandwich on top, then we put the lid down and seal it with a piece of tape,’” he says.

“Harland couldn’t understand so we suggested he go to our Jerry’s on New Circle Road,” Rosenthal continues. “I called our manager and told him a man named Sanders would be coming, and that he should show him how we prepare our boxes. The manager couldn’t believe what I was saying — that I wanted him to show our kitchen to a competitor. I had to repeat it several times.”

Rosenthal laughs, “Finally I said to the manager, ‘Harland is an old man — 65 years old — what difference can it make?’”

Foray into fast food

“Jerry’s Drive-Ins were a hit for many years, and then came fast-food competition including McDonald’s and, yes — Kentucky Fried Chicken,” Rosenthal recalls. “They pushed food out a window and the customer took it. They had no carpet, no background music, no bottomless coffee cup, such as we offered at Jerry’s. I knew we had to get into the fast-food business.

“Jerry retired in 1957 and when he died a few years later, I bought the remainder of the business. At that time there were 74 units including franchises. In the fast-food market, there were plenty of hamburger and chicken operations, but no fish. So we came up with Long John Silver’s,” he says.

“We first had to decide which fish to offer. A salesman wanted us to buy cod, but I didn’t want cod because my mother had given me cod liver oil when I was a child and it tasted terrible,” says

Rosenthal. “The salesman boiled some cod and had me taste it and to my surprise there was no taste. He even had me taste the water used to boil the fish and it had no taste, either. We selected cod and then came up with the distinctive batter.”

In 1969, Long John Silver’s opened in Lexington on Southland Drive next to the railroad overpass. The start-up operation was a test to see if fast-food fish would be accepted. Business was brisk from the beginning. Rosenthal remembers that even freight trains would stop by the restaurant to allow the men on board to come in and get carryout.

At the end of the first year of operation, the fledgling fast-food restaurant had been a wonderful success. Rosenthal recalls, “We couldn’t start building more Long Johns fast enough.” As the popularity of the new chain increased, he began buying national TV advertising. Eventually, Long John Silver’s grew to 1,500 units. “We were consuming all the cod that Iceland and Alaska could sell us,” Rosenthal shares.

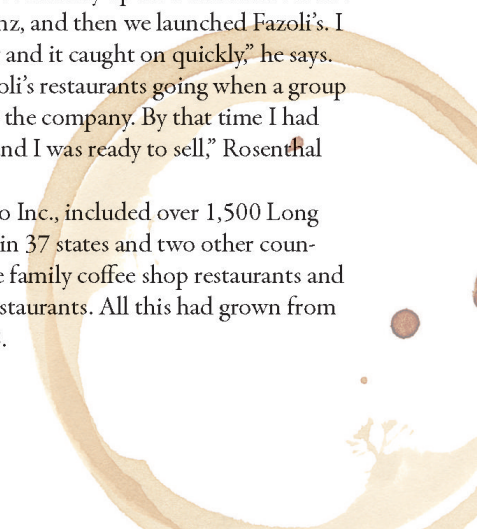

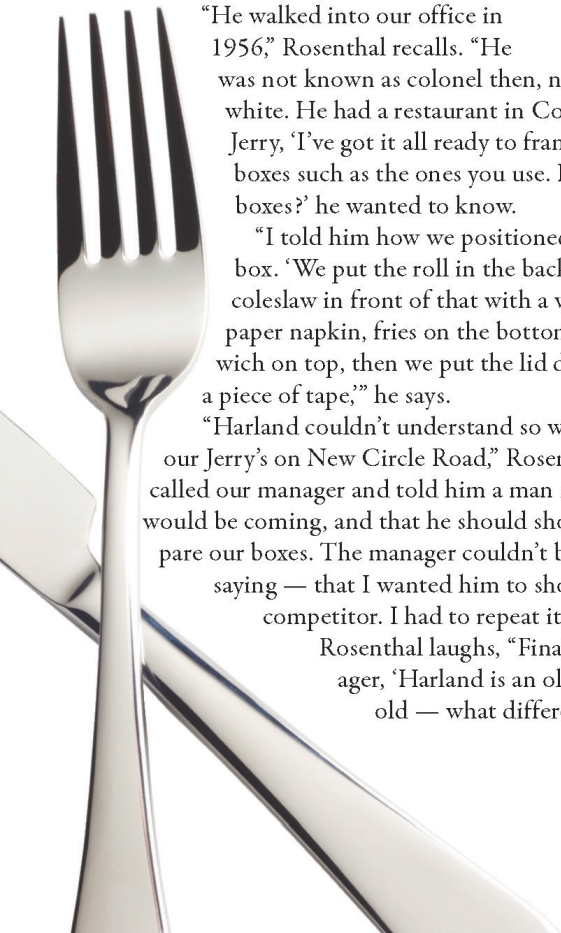

With the success of Long John Silver’s, he began to look for another fast-food option. “Nobody was doing Italian,” he explains. “We decided on fast-food pasta and pizza, and to prepare for this, we put in a full-service restaurant first to gain a background and knowledge of Italian cuisine. We actually opened three full-service Italian restaurants called Florenz, and then we launched Fazoli’s. I pulled that name out of the air and it caught on quickly,” he says.

“In 1989, we had several Fazoli’s restaurants going when a group from New York wanted to buy the company. By that time I had had two open-heart surgeries and I was ready to sell,” Rosenthal confides.

At the time of the sale, Jerrico Inc., included over 1,500 Long John Silver’s Seafood Shoppes in 37 states and two other countries, over 60 Jerry’s full-service family coffee shop restaurants and five Fazoli’s fast-food Italian restaurants. All this had grown from three small restaurants in 1948.

Awards

Rosenthal has received many awards throughout the years including the foodservice industry's premier honor, the Gold Plate Award. It was presented to him in 1975 by the International Foodservice Manufacturers Association in recognition of his standard-setting leadership and accomplishments as a foodservice operator, as well as his civic and community contributions. In 1983, the president of Iceland presented him with the Icelandic Order of the Falcon, the highest award given to anyone other than heads of state and royalty.

And in 2010, Rosenthal was inducted into the Kentucky Entrepreneur Hall of Fame.

He has also been named to the UK Gatton College of Business & Economics Hall of Fame, and has received honorary doctorates from the University of Kentucky, Eastern Kentucky University and Transylvania University.

Retirement pursuits

Soon after retiring as chairman of the board of Jerrico Inc., Rosenthal entered into a venture with two friends to develop Renfro Valley Entertainment Center, a country music venue in southern Kentucky. In retirement, he has also spent time restoring the historic Kentucky horse farm he bought in 1981 known as Patchen Wilkes, famed for the extraordinary white Thoroughbreds it has produced. Rosenthal has also devoted much of his time in recent years to philanthropic causes in central Kentucky and beyond.

Philanthropy

"I generally give to children's charities and education," he shares. "And being a graduate of the University of Kentucky, I've always had a high regard for my alma mater. I have a love for the university. It's been good to me. And I've always felt that I should give in appreciation for what I've received."

Mike Richey notes that Warren Rosenthal's commitment to his alma mater is extensive. "Warren has helped us in many ways with his astute business sense," Richey observes. "He has served as chairman of the University of Kentucky Development Council for a number of years and has helped us structure the various levels of the UK Fellows Society. He has likewise been a part of shaping the university's annual giving program. Currently, he is chairing the Schmidt Vocal Arts Center renovation initiative which will help boost our opera program."

Terry Mobley '65 ED AS, longtime UK chief development officer and retired vice president for Institutional Advancement, notes, "Warren Rosenthal has been an integral part of the fundraising program at the University of Kentucky for the past 35 years. Throughout that time, we were fortunate to have volunteers and donors who would come and go — but Warren came and stayed. I could always call upon Warren for advice or help and he would be there for the university. Whatever success the fundraising program has had at UK, Warren has been a part of it."

Mobley continues, "Warren has also had a breadth and depth of support for the university which is extraordinary. His philanthropy has included the Gatton College of Business & Economics, which is his UK college of graduation. He has also given to the W. T. Young Library, UK HealthCare and the new hospital, the opera program, the arts programs, the restoration of the Main Building and many other areas of the university. He and Betty are also huge UK athletics fans. They're season ticket holders for both UK basketball and football and rarely miss a game. Warren has an appreciation for the academic mission of the university and the athletic program as well.

"And his passion is the Child Development Center," Mobley comments further. "Behind the exterior of a highly successful corporate giant is a very sensitive, generous person. Like the late W. T. Young ('39 EN), Warren truly understands the pleasure of giving. We are grateful for all he has done for the University of Kentucky."

President Capilouto finds second home in Kentucky

By Kelli Elam

Dr. Eli Capilouto, University of Kentucky president, admits he doesn't fall in love easily. However, he readily admits to falling in love rather quickly with Kentucky. Since he was named UK's 12th president, Capilouto, a native of Montgomery, Ala., has come to think of Kentucky as his second home.

"My wife (Dr. Mary Lynne Capilouto) and I have had an opportunity to see some of the state and get to know some of its people," Capilouto said. "And it's been wonderful. It really reminds us of our home state of Alabama — the people, their compassion, their willingness to work hard. I fell in love with another state for very familiar reasons."

It took a very special place to get the Capiloutos out of Alabama. Kentucky was that place.

Capilouto, 61, officially took office on July 1, succeeding President Lee T. Todd, Jr., who retired after 10 years. He came to Lexington from the University of Alabama-Birmingham (UAB) where he had served as provost since 2005. Previously, he served as dean of the School of Public Health. Capilouto calls himself the “accidental administrator,” having gone from being a faculty member at the UAB College of Dentistry to serving as department chairman for three weeks, to interim dean to dean, and then provost.

The importance of education in Capilouto’s life is certainly no accident. His commitment to education can be traced back to his grandfather, a Turkish immigrant, who settled in Montgomery in the 1900s. His grandfather instilled the value of an education in his children, and they, in turn, instilled it in his grandchildren. Capilouto’s father attended college and became a dentist — a career path his son followed.

“Throughout my childhood my father always told me to get an education,” he said. “My father, and one other sibling, attended college. I never met my grandfather, but I hope that he would be proud. I would love to know what his expectations were for his family. If I could have supper with three people who are no longer living, one would definitely be my grandfather.”

Capilouto married the former Mary Lynne Hartselle in 1978. She is the former dean of the College of Dentistry at UAB.

Dr. Mary Lynne Capilouto shares her husband’s commitment to education. “He (Eli) wants UK to be the best it can be in terms of providing an education to the students because we’ve seen what education has done for our lives and other’s lives and how it improves the quality of life,” she said.

The Capiloutos have instilled that same value for education in their daughter, Emily, who is in graduate school at UAB.

“Education has always been part of our lives,” President Capilouto said. “Our daughter took the money she received for her Bat Mitzvah and created a scholarship in Montgomery for (international) students. I contribute to that scholarship. We were immigrants, so it’s very important to us.”

He added that one of the most meaningful things anyone can do is be a parent. “It overshadows everything else,” he said.

Capilouto talks of “dreaming big.” He added that those dreams are best when shared.

“It’s wonderful to share your dreams with someone who understands. My wife and I are both administrators — sometimes at the end of the day, we don’t even have to say anything, we just look at each other and understand. It’s good to be able to share that with someone,” he said.

Capilouto received his bachelor’s degree from the University of Alabama in 1971, earned a dental degree in 1975 and a master’s degree in epidemiology from UAB in 1985. In 1991, he received his doctorate in health policy and management from the Harvard University School of Public Health. While at Harvard, he was a recipient of a Robert Wood Johnson Dental Scholars Award, a National Center for Health Services Research Fellowship, and the Charles Wilinsky Award for academic achievement. He has served on numerous national advisory boards and committees and has also served as referee and editor for many professionals journals. As provost at UAB, Capilouto served as the chief academic officer for a university with 11 schools and colleges, 17,543 students and $460 million in annual external research. Capilouto worked closely with administrators, faculty, staff and students to advance new initiatives in innovative teaching and learning, research and service in support of the university's strategic plan. He also held the rank of professor.

Capilouto wasn't looking to leave UAB, but he was intrigued about the possibility of becoming UK's president. However, he wasn't encouraged after the first phone call.

"After the first (phone) interview, I called my wife and told her I was disappointed because I didn't think it went well," he said. "She assured me that it would be okay. And I said, 'But you don't understand, I really like those people.'"

Capilouto added that prior to learning he had, in fact, gotten the job, he found himself cheering for the Wildcats during the NCAA Tournament.

Even though he might not have originally planned on one day being a university president, now that he is president of the University of Kentucky, Capilouto embraces the opportunity.

"My daughter says, 'You're just you,'" Capilouto said. "I do recognize the seriousness of the position. It's inspiring to think about all the things that are possible. It really is incredible to be afforded this opportunity to serve. It all starts with people — and it's great to see the reach of UK across this state."

Kentucky, like his home state of Alabama, faces many challenges today. The state also knows the hard work and sacrifice needed to move forward in education, research and healthcare. The state's flagship university is an integral part of the progress, something Capilouto knows well.

"The university means so much to the people of Kentucky," he said. "It's an awesome responsibility. The first part of that responsibility is to ensure people have access to degrees, not just college, but to degrees."

Capilouto says it's critical to the success of the state and university to attract the best and brightest students, faculty, and staff.

"It's critically important that we retain these students," he said of the state's top students. "Other states will go after them, hoping they become future citizens. We need them here."

Capilouto also sees facilities, state funding, and maintaining a balance among the university's various departments as vitally important moving forward.

He added that a continued commitment to research is vital, as well.

"If you are born today, your life span is probably 30 years more than it was 50 or 75 years ago," he said. "That is all because of research, a result of discovery. Some of the greatest discoveries have come since 1900 and we have research to thank."

Capilouto is proud to be a part of the rich tradition of the University of Kentucky and looks forward to the challenges and successes to come. When asked what he would like people to say about his tenure as UK's president, Capilouto replied, "We did our best to educate the next generation of citizens." ■

Mat Saunders: DIGGING UP ADVENTURE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

UK alum recently uncovered a major discovery in archaeology

By Christina Noll

Mat Saunders '01 AS has never had to run for his life while being chased through a cave by a 10-ton boulder, and he didn't mention having a tremendous fear of snakes, but his career — at least to some — is right up there with the adventures of Indiana Jones starring Harrison Ford.

Just like Jones in the movies, Saunders spends part of his time teaching and part of his time excavating ancient ruins. To be more specific, Saunders oversees excavations at a Maya archaeological site in the country of Belize.

When he's not in Central America, he teaches anthropology, world religions, history and mythology at Davidson Day School, a private K-12 college preparatory school in Davidson, N.C. There he arranges summer trips to Belize for select Davidson Day students and other students from across the country and the world.

Just this past summer, Saunders and his students continued excavations at Cahal Pech Maya ruins site in western Belize, where their research has been based for the last six years. There they made what Saunders calls the most amazing discovery of his career: an elaborate burial tomb. Within the tomb, they discovered four individuals along with decorative jade ornaments, 10 complete ceramic vessels and more.

Two of the items were extremely monumental for the entire Maya civilization. First was the discovery of three bone rings carved with Maya hieroglyphics naming a king of Cahal Pech, offering a tremendous breakthrough in the decipherment of language which will unlock other texts in the Maya world. The other was a conch shell still stained with the residue of the paint it once held. This offers the first concrete evidence that conch shells were used to hold paint.

But Saunders wasn't always excavating ancient tombs. His adventurous lifestyle all started at the University of Kentucky.

Saunders transferred to UK from the former Ashland Community College in 1997 with the intention of studying biology. I grew up in a household that loved UK sports," he says. "And UK's reputation in the Biology Department was also a huge draw."

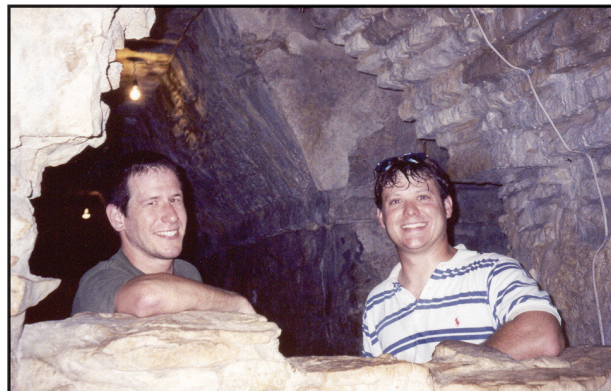

After taking a few courses in anthropology, he decided that was more the path he wanted to take with his life. That's where Saunders met Doug Weinberg, a fellow student in the Anthropology Department. They worked together from 2000-04, excavating some of the most important Maya sites in Belize. "Doug and I were great friends before working in Belize together but the several years in Belize made us like inseparable brothers," says Saunders.

Saunders credits his career path to his friendship with Weinberg, as well. "It was all because of Doug really," he says. "The truth of the matter was, I had a great deal of interest in the Maya but I had no true loyalty until I went to the field school with Doug in 2000," he explains.

He ended up in Belize

after Weinberg called him one night and said that he wanted to apply to the Belize Valley Archaeological Reconnaissance Project field school and recommended Saunders go with him. "Once in Belize, Doug and I found our way into the top tier of the field school and charmed the directors with our Kentucky-fried demeanor," he jokes. "We were asked back the next year as staff and five years later we had more excavation experience than most post-docs."

Weinberg completed the archaeological survey of a controversial hydroelectric dam site which ended up destroying thousands of acres of wildlife habitat and hundreds of Maya sites. Tragically, a few months after he finished the project, Weinberg died from a pulmonary embolism. He was only 29. "That day I lost my best friend but found the motivation to achieve everything I have," says Saunders.

Doug Weinberg and Saunders visited the site of Palenque in Chiapas, Mexico, in 2001.

Due to the amazing finds Saunders and his team made this summer, final decisions were made to build the Douglas M. Weinberg Cultural Research Center on the site at Cahal Pech. The 36,000-square-foot research facility will help lower cost for students, create jobs for archaeologists, and develop the local economy and tourism. The center will also be a way for Weinberg's legacy to live into the future. "All of this will happen while we are writing the history of prehistoric Belize," Saunders says. "This project will hopefully set a standard for site preservation and archaeological research across the globe and the cool thing is we are starting it as a high-school driven program."

While the immediate goal is to complete the research facility, Saunders long-term goals are to advance the field of archaeology and site preservation to a point that it has never seen. "I want to perfect a formula that will promote archaeology and create job opportunities for students like Doug and me," he says. "Ultimately my dream is to provide two students in the Anthropology Department at UK with the financial assistance to carry out their archaeological research each summer in Belize."

Weinberg's legacy will also live on through Saunders own work. "I still love the thrill of the dig," he says. "I'm very privileged to work at some of the most exciting ancient Maya sites in Mesoamerica and it never gets old."

So what does Indiana Jones — or Mat Saunders — do when he's not teaching or excavating at ancient sites in South America? He enjoys spending time with his wife, Priscilla, and their two children, Owen and Sophie. He is excited to be able to share his experiences with his family. "Doug and I were fortunate enough to have the international experience in our 20s; it changed our lives but I wish it would have happened sooner," he says. "I love the fact that I'm raising my own kids in another country and sharing the experience with hundreds of high school students. It has an enormous impact on kids."

Indeed, Saunders is making a tremendous impact on the archaeological world and students of archaeology. And, it's safe to say, we are all looking forward to the sequel. ■

Ceal Barry: Trailblazer

By Kelli Elam

Ceal Barry returned to campus to receive the 2011 Susan B. Feamster Trailblazer Award. The award is named for Sue Feamster, right, the first women's Athletics director at UK. After graduating from UK, Barry went on to have a very successful coaching career.

When Ceal Barry BS '77 returned to campus to receive the 2011 Susan B. Feamster Trailblazer Award, she was amazed at how so many things were the same as she remembered from her time as a student. While campus landmarks such as the Seaton Center, Kirwan-Blanding Dorm Complex, the White Hall Classroom Building and many others were as Barry remembered, her time at UK was one of major change.

Barry is Associate Athletic Director for Student Services at the University of Colorado. She came to UK from Assumption High School in Louisville and was a four-year letter-earner in women's basketball from 1973-77. She played three years under Coach Feamster and one under Coach Debbie Yow. During her senior season, Barry was a guard on the team that upset No. 2 Tennessee Tech in Memorial Coliseum. Her basketball career at UK can be defined in two parts — before Title IX and after Title IX. (Title IX is a law passed in 1972 that requires gender equity for men and women in every education program that receives federal funding.)

She was part of the first class of female student-athletes to receive scholarship aid for athletics.

"Even then, I knew what it meant," Barry said of the significance of the Title IX legislation. "For women to finally receive athletic scholarships, we were all aware of the importance of it. I felt it was an honor to be a part of it at UK."

During her freshman and sophomore seasons, women's basketball was part of the recreation department housed at the Seaton Center. Beginning in 1973, with the phasing in of legislation to equalize women's collegiate sports, Barry's experience as a basketball player at UK changed greatly.

Barry recalls working for Feamster, who was UK's first women's athletics director and former women's basketball coach, at the Seaton Center in the Women's Athletics Office. For away games, players would go to the campus motor pool and get state cars to make the trips.

"My junior and seniors years, we had charter buses, uniforms with our names on them — those were the type of changes that we noticed," she said. "I think our self-esteem increased as athletes with more resources. We knew we deserved it. Title IX made it possible."

Barry said most people today probably couldn't imagine a time prior to the legislation.

"It really was a different era," she said. "The popularity of women's sports has increased so much across the country, and certainly at UK. (UK Athletics Director) Mitch Barnhart has done a fantastic job here. My time at Kentucky was wonderful, under both scenarios."

Barry said working as a student for Feamster helped shape her career path, but also was a factor in her earning an accounting degree at UK.

"She really pushed me to think bigger. She gave me a job as a student worker for 20 hours a week. She was just a huge influence on my life. I'm so appreciative and grateful for that," says Barry.

Barry retired from coaching after 22 seasons leading the Buffalo program with an impressive resume that includes 427 victories, the most by any coach at the school, 12 NCAA tournament appearances, including six Sweet 16 and three Elite Eight appearances, 13 20-win seasons, four conference championships and numerous Coach of the Year honors. She also was an assistant coach for the 1996 Olympic Gold Medal women's basketball team.

Her coaching career began shortly after graduation at the University of Cincinnati. "Sue called UC on my behalf," she said. "I had the opportunity to go for a master's degree or coach. I decided to go to Cincinnati. That was the beginning of my coaching career."

Barry was a graduate assistant at Cincinnati for two seasons and was head coach from 1979-83, compiling a record of 83-42 before moving on to Colorado. She was hired to lead the then Lady-Buffs into the Big Eight Conference (now the Big 12) that officially started league play her first season at the helm. Barry became the 24th coach in women's NCAA history to reach 500 career wins.

Barry said when she first arrived at Colorado, basketball wasn't all that popular. But within a few seasons, her teams were playing in a sold-out arena.

"We won," she said. "That's really the simple reason why people came to our games. When you win, they come. And we were very fortunate to win a lot of games."

Barry says she misses the interaction with players as a coach, but doesn't miss the "wear and tear" of traveling and recruiting. During her recent visit to campus, not only did she enjoy seeing the familiar places and buildings, she was impressed by the changes as well.

"It was amazing to see buildings such as the Young Library and the Craft Center," she said. I also got to attend practice with (UK women's basketball coach) Matthew Mitchell. He couldn't have been nicer and I was so impressed by the way he runs practice. He's a terrific coach and I know the program is in great hands."

Barry hopes it won't be as long before her next visit to campus. "It was great to be back. I had a huge smile on my face the entire time." ■

The healing power of art

The opening of the UK Chandler Hospital Pavilion has brought colorful, unique works of art to the attention of all those who visit the facility. It is clear that the art displayed was chosen with a purpose and its beauty helps to re-humanize medicine. The UK Arts in HealthCare program is supported solely by private funds.

Art glass is also showcased in the Myra Leigh Tobin Chapel. The theme of the glass in the chapel conveys the sense of hope and inspiration provided by springtime in Kentucky. It was chosen by UK alumna and philanthropist Myra Leigh Tobin, who received a bachelor's degree in home economics in 1962.

New campus landmark: Wildcat Alumni Plaza

The University of Kentucky is about to have a new "must visit" location for meeting up with friends and snapping memorable photos, connecting students, alumni, and families to the university. We are excited to announce that the UK Alumni Association is creating a new campus landmark with the focal point being a bronze sculpture of a Wildcat, the University of Kentucky's mascot.

Wildcat Alumni Plaza and the bronze Wildcat sculpture will be constructed across the street from Memorial Coliseum near Stoll Field with an expected completion date of spring 2012. The sculpture, located at a prime entryway to campus, will be a symbol of tradition embraced by the entire university family. This new campus landmark will stand as a rallying point for students to show their pride in the university and to remind alumni of memories of their time on campus.

The completed sculpture is expected to be approximately 7-foot tall (including the base) and 9-foot long. ■

UK Alumni Association changes process for board of directors voting

Past President Bob Pickard, board member Scott Wittich and Past President Diane Massie prepare to honor the Distinguished Service Award recipients.

The Board of Directors of the University of Kentucky Alumni Association plays a critical role in the success of the association. At the January 15, 2011, board meeting the process was changed for electing future members to the board of directors. This change was largely brought about in response to a goal in the strategic plan that calls for a plan to identify, assess and develop talent for leadership continuity. Other factors leading to the change were the decline in member voting participation over the years and finding that most other alumni associations around the country conduct their elections in this way.

The new process will involve a slate of nominees presented to the board of directors for election at the association's annual meeting in June, instead of elections by ballot voting. The new process was a decision reached after two years of discussions by board committees. This will help take the UK Alumni Association into the future with strong and able leaders. The Nominating Committee encourages nominations for these positions using the Nomination Form at right.

David Ratterman, chairman of the Nominating Committee, points out that UK is fortunate to have an extraordinary reservoir of extremely talented alumni, but often, this reservoir is largely untapped. "Candidates will be vetted for their interest, qualifications, and availability, and then nominated and elected by the current board. This will also allow us to continue to focus on the diversity goals of the association," Ratterman says.

Cammie Grant, current association president, notes that the new process is partially being driven by the beneficial experiences of the past presidents of the association. "This puts the voting in the hands of individuals who have previously demonstrated they are most committed to the success of our organization," she says. This is important, she adds, because district voting participation for board elections shrank from 34 percent in 2001 to 12 percent in 2010.

Past president of the association, Diane Massie, says she is confident that this method for handling elections will be successful because members of the board are typically the most familiar with the talents of potential nominees. "The current board is a large group of geographically and demographically balanced individuals representing a wide cross section of professional expertise," she says.

Scott Davis, past president of the association, says the new process will encourage self-nomination from individuals who do not live near an active club but who want to share a commitment to UK. "The association can identify and cultivate alumni with special skills, knowledge and perspectives who are not club members," he says.

Ratterman agrees wholeheartedly. "Board

membership affords unique access to university departments and top leaders of the university through association presentations at every meeting. It makes you very proud to listen to these deans and departments heads, who have devoted their lives to be of service to students and their academic calling, and see firsthand how that impacts the university community and how UK strives to make it all work."

Board members have unique access at board meetings to guest speakers from academics and athletics, such as former football coach Rich Brooks.

Want to nominate a qualified individual for the board? Perhaps yourself? Please fill out the form on the next page and return it by fax or mail. Or complete the online form at www.ukalumni.net.

Tempur-Pedic International Announces Plans for its new World Headquarters at Coldstream, in Lexington Kentucky

UK alums and Tempur-Pedic Executive Vice-Presidents Brad Patrick and Matt Clift in the company's current Lexington showroom.

Talk about the re-affirmation of a Lexington, Kentucky business address! Tempur-Pedic International, a high-profile NYSE company, has just announced intentions to grow its presence in Kentucky by building its new world headquarters here in Lexington. The company will invest $18 million to construct a new facility at the University of Kentucky's Coldstream Research Park.

Tempur-Pedic, (NYSE:TPX) - the worldwide leader in premium and specialty sleep - designs, manufactures and distributes the popular family of TEMPUR® material based mattresses, pillows, and related products, improving the quality of sleep for people in 80 countries around the world.

Mark Sarvary, Tempur-Pedic International's President and CEO, notes that "We couldn't be more pleased that our world-wide success is driving expansion and creating new job opportunities right here in the Bluegrass. Our new 100,000 square foot world headquarters will be located on UK's easily-accessible Coldstream Research campus; we are planning to increase our workforce by creating 65 new jobs over the next five years." Worthy of note: Tempur-Pedic currently has nearly 50 UK grads on staff in its existing local facilities.

According to Lexington's newly-elected Mayor Jim Gray, "Growing and retaining the headquarters of this rapidly expanding internationally known brand is essential and will once again show the world that Lexington is a viable and thriving location for any world headquarters operation."

Commerce Lexington's Economic Development Senior Vice President Gina H. Greathouse, also a UK Grad, echoed the Mayor's enthusiasm noting, "Tempur-Pedic has been an exceptional corporate citizen here for many years. The company's decision to remain in Lexington and build its new world headquarters at the Coldstream Research Park is a huge affirmation of how our amazing city has become a magnet for business start-ups and expansions. This comes as no surprise given Lexington is highly rated nationally as a great place to find a job, and raise a family."

The background for the company's rapid growth began in the 1970's when NASA scientists developed a pressure-absorbing material designed to help cushion astronauts during space shuttle lift-offs. Over the next two decades, Tempur-Pedic's founding scientists invested millions of dollars to perfect what became known as proprietary TEMPUR material for use in mattresses and other sleep products. In 1992, Lexington resident and entrepreneur, Bob Trussell visited the scientists and quickly realized the potential business opportunity in improving sleep for consumers worldwide. Soon after, he founded Tempur-Pedic and a revolution in sleep comfort was born. Eventually, Tempur-Pedic became a U.S.-based, public company traded on the NYSE with its international headquarters in Lexington, with a company-wide focus on sleep products.

Two UK grads, Matt Clift and Brad Patrick, are both senior executives with the company. Patrick, EVP and Chief Human Resources Officer, earned his BBA in personnel/industrial relations from UK in 1986. His professional career has included high-profile national and international positions with Ralston Purina, Frito Lay, Delta Air Lines, Gillette/Procter & Gamble and Sara Lee. Clift earned his BS in Chemical Engineering from UK in 1981 and began his professional career with IBM in Lexington, working within the typewriter division. Clift transitioned to Lexmark in 1991, where he served as Vice President & General Manager until 2004. Today, as Tempur-Pedic's EVP of Operations, he is responsible for Global Activities, R&D, Engineering, Sourcing, Manufacturing, Supply Chain, and IT.

Tempur-Pedic's executive leadership team is a "who's who" of American industry. Led by Mark Sarvary, formerly EVP and President of Campbell Soup's North America division who joined Tempur-Pedic in 2008, members include a cadre of top executives from such high profile companies as Gillette, General Electric, Black & Decker and Papa John's.

This dynamic, global organization, headquartered right here in Lexington, focuses on one goal - making Tempur-Pedic the world's favorite mattress and pillow brand.

Tempur-Pedic's product offerings include an impressive array of incredibly comfortable and supportive mattresses, with models offering different levels of softness and firmness, as well as pillows, bed linens, and other accessories. In the U.S., Tempur-Pedic sells its products at over 8,000 retailer locations, directly through its website (TempurPedic.com) and telephone call center, making its products easily accessible to everyone.

Commerce Lexington's Greathouse noted, "We are certainly honored that Tempur-Pedic is planning to remain in Lexington and to build its new world headquarters at the Coldstream Research Park. Their announcement underscores the successes our city and region have achieved. If you're a UK graduate not living in Lexington or Central Kentucky, there are many reasons for you to consider relocating back to the Bluegrass area, one of which is the fact that Lexington has just been named by Forbes as the #1 City in America to find a good job!*".

Q: Coming out of this recession, what lessons are learned?

A: We now know there is no such thing as a stable, "safe" career or employer. According to human resource consultant and UK alumnus Wallace Herndon, "When a lot of people lose their jobs they look for the very same type of job again. Often those jobs no longer exist. Evaluate your skills and start applying them to different positions or other types of businesses. If you are unemployed, particularly for a long period of time, it is imperative to keep your skills fresh or obtain new skills through classes, certifications or seminars. Since the bulk of the growth in our economy is going to be created with jobs that don't yet exist, think creatively about how you fit in. Often people who volunteer for new projects, take on a new responsibility, and try to learn new things on the job have a better chance of landing a new position."

Caroline Francis

Q: Key pointers when updating a resume?

A: Your goal is to catch the employer's attention in the first one-third of your resume. Keep the resume to two pages or less, with recent and relevant information. Consider adding a Professional Summary to the beginning of your resume. The typical Objective Statement does not convey what you bring to the table. Replace your objective statement with an illustrative summary, inserting a headline above the summary to communicate your intention, such as Public Relations & Marketing Manager. You could also substitute the title of the position you are seeking in place of your headline.

Include bulleted Core Competencies (one or two word statements, for example, Contract Negotiation) in the first one-third of your resume. This gives a quick review of the remaining portion of your resume. Load this and your professional summary with keywords from the target industry. The job description is a good place to locate buzzwords. Use the company's own terminology and prove that you are a "good fit."

Thomas G. Barnes, UK Extension professor and wildlife Extension specialist in the Department of Forestry, has written “How to Find and Photograph Kentucky Wildflowers.”

This book is a wonderful guide on finding, appreciating and photographing wildflowers, but it goes even beyond that. Barnes, who has illustrated and written several volumes on the natural beauty of Kentucky and the United States, has aimed this book at those who want to elevate their photography from taking documentary snapshots to making artistic flower portraits. In addition, it is the only book of its kind dedicated solely to Kentucky wildlife photography, covering the technical aspects of taking both landscape and close-up shots, processing images and creating a range of professional images and tones.

Author and photographer Barnes has spent three decades honing his wildlife photography skills throughout the Bluegrass State and has authored more than 50 scientific research articles, 60 cooperative Extension publications, and 100 magazine articles. In “How to Find and Photograph Kentucky Wildflowers” he shares his vast knowledge on creating the most beautiful wildflower portraits.

Douglas A. Boyd, director of the Louie B. Nunn Center for Oral History at UK, is the author of “Crawfish Bottom: Recovering a Lost Kentucky Community.”

This book presents an oral history of a forgotten neighborhood in northern Frankfort. Crawfish Bottom was located on 50 acres of swampy land along the Kentucky River and had a reputation for vice, violence, moral corruption, and unsanitary conditions. A former Frankfort police officer described Crawfish Bottom residents as a “rough class of people, who didn’t mind killing or being killed.” Those issues made it a target for urban renewal projects that replaced the neighborhood with the city’s Capital Plaza in the mid-1960s.

Boyd’s book traces the evolution of the controversial community that ultimately saw 400 families displaced. Using oral histories, he provides a record of a vanished neighborhood and demonstrates how this type of study enhances the historical record. This book weaves together history, folklore and geography to engage the reader on a journey through this erased community.

Boyd is also a coeditor of “Community Memories: A Glimpse of African American Life in Frankfort, Kentucky.”
