SGA debates proposals about elections, fees

Bill requiring voting by ticket is overwhelmingly defeated

By JAY BLANTON
News Editor

The Student Government Association last night soundly defeated an amendment proposal that would have forced students to vote in elections according to tickets only.

The amendment, which was defeated by a 23-6 margin, would have kept students from voting in executive branch elections according to individual positions.

Jason Williams, SGA executive branch member, said he sponsored the amendment because "there comes a time when everyone stands up for what they believe in."

During his involvement in SGA, Williams said he has seen SGA do a lot of good things, but he's also seen "a lot of back-stabbing."

If a split ticket were elected, that back-stabbing would increase, he said. With a split ticket in office, every time the president tried to do something positive, the vice presidents might be there to undermine it.

"It'd be very nice to say we're all mature people" and could handle a split ticket fairly, Williams said. That would be "idealistic."

"We've got to be realistic," he said.

Discussion prior to the senate meeting had indicated the amendment was politically motivated, Williams said, alluding to a Kentucky Kernel editorial that said Williams "openly" admitted his support for Kenny Arington.

Arington, who is currently SGA senior vice president, is a candidate for president next year.

"I think all (of) you know me well enough now to know I'm a person of personal integrity," he said. "I just felt that it's time for me to make my stand."

However, debate on the amendment, which lasted about 20 minutes, ended with a 23-6 vote.

Senators endorse freeze on tuition increases

By JAY BLANTON
News Editor

The Student Government Association last night voted to endorse a proposal calling for a tuition freeze at the University.

The UK Board of Trustees voted on Tuesday to confirm a Council on Higher Education ruling that will raise tuition costs — starting next semester — to $706.

UK students currently pay $666 a semester.

Although tuition rates, which are set every two years by the CHE, have already been set for next year, now is "perfect timing for this bill," said SGA President Donna Greenwell.

Because the rates are established every two years, Greenwell said, this resolution can go to the CHE and be pushed for the next time tuition rates are set.

Mehran Jahed, SGA graduate school senator and the bill's primary sponsor, said the bill is "maybe the most important issue students can face."

The resolution states that "tuition for in-state undergraduate students at the Lexington campus has increased by 96.81 percent since 1981." With factors such as this, Jahed said, there will be "lots of families . . . who are not going to be able to make" tuition costs.

Jahed said this would have "grave, grave consequences for the nation."

The resolution cites that "Michigan's public colleges and universities undertook a two- to three-year freeze to remedy a situation of tuition rising way above inflation."

Furthermore, Indiana University's student representatives "have expressed a desire to freeze that university's rapidly rising tuition."

Jody Hanks, business senator, though, said if a tuition increase were designed to "enhance" education, that might be allowable. At UK, however, that has not occurred.

Hanks said in the College of Business and Economics, he has to struggle to find a seat in some of his classes, and no faculty members have been added to deal with overcrowding.

A tuition increase, he said, is supposed to help with that.

However, "I don't see any more faculty" in the business college, Hanks said. "I'm supposed to get an increased education."

"Where did this money go?" Hanks asked. "Where's the credibility that we're getting for these increases in tuition?"

Greenwell said she is fully in favor of this resolution, but the action by SGA last night was just the first step.

If students had been lobbying the last time a tuition rate was set, Greenwell said, "I feel like we could have had an impact."

Coffin emphasizes message of crusade

By WILL RENSHAW

A coffin and the Grim Reaper are not typical scenes of campus life, but yesterday their images were used to bring life to a multi-image production titled "If I Should Die," which was sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ.

"We got a lot of strange looks and laughs and handed out about 1,500 fliers," said Leon Chadwick, campus director of the organization.

Chadwick said the coffin and the Grim Reaper has been used nationwide to gain publicity for the production.

The idea is based on the production's emphasis of the phrase, "The coffin holds the corpse, but who holds the spirit?"

"We had to get permission first, though," Chadwick said. "This campus is really conserva-

Education, joblessness at top of Carroll's list of priorities for state

By C.A. DUANE BONIFER
Staff Writer

Kentucky's education governor came to UK yesterday and gave students a lesson on the problems of Kentucky.

Using the blackboard to illustrate many of his points, as he often did during his administration, Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Julian Carroll told about 20 students in 228 Student Center that he is ready to get back into politics.

Although he has enjoyed being out of politics for more than seven years, Carroll told the group of mainly members of Young Democrats that he feels a need to become active again.

"I guess really for an individual who's 55 years of age . . . I couldn't have asked for a better life," the McCracken County native said. "But all of my life, I've never been willing to leave it to someone else."

Carroll left Frankfort in 1979, after spending five years as governor. During his tenure as the state's chief executive, Carroll established himself as Kentucky's education governor because of the improvements made in the area of education.

And Carroll said education will once again top his agenda during this campaign.

"Almost everything we accomplished has vanished," he said.

Carroll said the high illiteracy rate among Kentuckians is one of the main causes of the crime rates, the welfare state and the decline in government revenue.

Proposals Carroll has made to reform the ailing educational system include establishing a counseling program in the first grade in hopes of fighting the rising dropout rate.

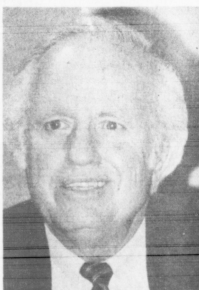

Carroll said he is also concerned about the joblessness in the state. Since 1980, Carroll said, 55,000 factory workers have lost their jobs.

"All of the major problems we have in state government are the result of people being unemployed," he said.

As a result of Kentucky's high unemployment rate, Carroll said, a chain reaction has been set off, resulting in several social dilemmas he finds "very, very disturbing."

"We don't have enough people employed to pay the bills for the people unemployed," he said. "Where are our jobs?"

Carroll said most of America's jobs have gone overseas — especially to Japan.

If re-elected, Carroll said he would be willing to lobby on Capitol Hill with other states' governors for protectionist legislation.

Currently, Carroll believes some foreign nations — especially Japan — have too much of a trade advantage over the United States, Carroll said the main reason for this upper hand is that many of those nations invest less of their gross national product in defense than the United States does.

Consequently, he said, the United States has been forced to borrow money in order to pay off its foreign

Reagan admits mistake, takes responsibility for Iran dealings

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan acknowledged last night that his once-secret Iranian initiative "deteriorated" into an arms-for-hostages deal and said, "It was a mistake."

In a speech prepared for delivery from the Oval Office, Reagan said that "as president, I cannot escape responsibility."

Echoing criticism issued by the Tower commission, Reagan said he did not ask enough questions of his aides about the specifics of the Iran initiative.

Reagan has said before that mistakes were made in the Iran initiative but has not said he committed any of them. He had been urged in advance by Republicans and Democrats alike to make such a statement.

Noting that he has not said much about the affair over the past three months, Reagan acknowledged, "I've paid a price for my silence in terms of your trust and confidence. But I have had to wait, as have you, for the complete story."

However, he said he was relieved that it said the president "does indeed want the full story to be told."

The address marked Reagan's first detailed response to the Tower commission's criticism of his detached management style and ignorance about the details and consequences of his arms-to-Iran policy.

The speech was widely believed to be a crucial step in the White House drive to repair political damage caused by the affair. Two earlier speeches failed to end the controversy or halt the drop in Reagan's popularity in the polls.

"I take full responsibility for my own actions and for those of my administration," Reagan said. "As angry as I may be about activities undertaken without my knowledge, I am still accountable for these activities. As disappointed as I may be in someone who served me, I am still the one who must answer to the American people for this behavior."

Reagan said he found the secret bank accounts and diverted funds "personally distasteful," but that he had to admit: "This happened on my watch."

Discussing the arms-to-Iran policy, Reagan noted that he has said previously that he did not trade weapons for hostages.

"My heart and my best intentions still tell me that is true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not," Reagan said.

Referring to the Tower commission's criticism of his management

Dave Edmunds plays up music's rockabilly roots on his latest live album

By ERIC REECE

I Hear You Rockin' The Dave Edmunds Band Live/Columbia Records (CBS)

I Hear You Rockin' is a freewheeling collection of original songs and covers that draws attention to the music of Dave Edmunds as the groundwork upon which various popular artists built their careers.

Edmunds has seen the effects of punk, new wave, no wave and watered-down pop — all the while maintaining the standards that first won him popularity and respect in Britain.

Take the best acts from these genres and subgenres, and you begin to recognize the influence of Edmunds.

When "Girls Talk," which opens this LP, emerged as an Elvis Costello B-side, it was forgivable to overlook the rockabilly undertones in light of Costello's wordplay. When Edmunds ups the tempo here, his impact on Britain's early new wave scene becomes evident.

Also apparent is the cohesiveness of Edmunds' band, reminiscent of his early days with Nick Lowe and Rockpile. Edmunds includes here Graham Parker's "Crawling From the Wreckage" and Lowe's "I Knew the Bride (When She Used to Rock and Roll).

out most of the crowd noise, with the exception of the polite, congenial applause at the end of each track. Also included are classics like "The Wanderer" and "Ju Ju Man."

He also pulls Jeff Lynne's "Slipping Away" into the rockabilly fold, inserting gritty guitars for slick synthesizers.

The finished product knocks some of the edges off previous recordings of these songs, rendering an exceptionally danceable slice of vinyl that's party ready.

Writers, editors go out on strike at CBS, ABC

By MARJORIE ANDERS
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Network officials at ABC and CBS said Tuesday that a two-day-old strike by writers and editors was having little effect on news broadcasts, but several politicians refused to cross picket lines and technical problems were reported at the CBS affiliate in Los Angeles.

Meanwhile, network negotiators agreed to a request from a federal mediator to meet with the union today.

About 525 members of the Writers Guild of America went on strike Monday over job security. The walk-out affects workers at the networks and seven affiliated television and radio stations in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Washington.

Spokesmen for ABC and CBS said network news production was continuing without much disruption, with managers and executives filling in for striking workers.

"People are doing very well," said CBS spokesman George Schweitzer. "All the broadcasts are on the air."

However, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan canceled an appearance on ABC's "Good Morning America" because "he did not want to cross the picket line," said Molly Phee, a spokeswoman for the New York Democrat.

Former Nevada Sen. Paul Laxalt refused to cross a picket line for an appearance on CBS's "Nightwatch" on Monday, said spokeswoman Beth Bodenstetter. And New York Mayor Edward I. Koch asked that his WCBS radio program be broadcast from his residence Tuesday night so he would not have to cross a picket line.

Some members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers union, which represents camera operators, electronic news gathering crews and technicians, were honoring the strike in Los Angeles. However, the IBEW local had not sanctioned the action by its members.

The networks are seeking major concessions, including the right to fire or lay off employees without cause and without recourse to arbitration. They also want the unlimited right to use temporary and part-time employees and to have on-air people write for others besides themselves.

utes, was argued by only senators who were opposed to the amendment.

Although six senators voted for the amendment, no argument on its behalf was heard.

Ken Walker, election board chairman, said the SGA Election Board was not advised of the amendment, "nor was its input asked in this bill."

Walker said the amendment, if enacted by the senate, would force the election board to "view the ticket as an entity, thereby holding all members of the ticket (responsible) for each other's actions."

Consequently, if a cheating violation occurred by one member of the ticket, the entire ticket would be held responsible and "therefore nullify the whole ticket in favor of the second-place ticket."

Walker also said the amendment had no "historical precedent" on which to be based. A split ticket has never been elected, Walker said, and thus it can't be known whether the ticket would work.

Walker added that the amendment "undermines the students' right to vote for who they think is the best person for the stated position."

"If a person wishes to vote for the presidential candidate on one ticket and a vice presidential candidate on another, they should have the right" to choose, he said.

John Fischer, SGA senator at large, agreed, saying the senate should be given some credit, that if a split ticket were elected, it would be able to function.

Tina Payne, Student Activities Board vice president, said if the amendment were approved by the senate, she would "feel like (the senate is) selling us short."

"It's not the right of this body to take that away from us," she said.

trade debts, while "defending the world" at the same time.

"It doesn't take many years of the U.S. borrowing from the Japanese until they start dictating foreign policy," he said.

If the United States does not get its jobs back from overseas, Carroll said, "we're not going to be able to survive as a nation."

Once the jobs come back to Kentucky, Carroll said, there is the need for better management than in past administrations, where detail was not given the proper amount of attention.

"You can't run state government like a show business," he said.

In the area of economic development, Carroll said he has devised a two-part plan.

The first part is called a "quick-fix program," with heavy concentration on coal, match-marketing and tourism. Carroll's long-range goal is to establish a venture capital program for small businesses.

"You can make a difference (in state government) if you start insisting that someone starts turning this thing around," he said.

Yesterday, a poll commissioned by former Gov. John Y. Brown Jr.'s campaign showed that Brown had a substantial lead over all the other Democratic candidates.

Carroll refuted those figures, claiming they were totally off the mark with other polls taken.

"I don't think there's any integrity in his figures," Carroll said.

style, Reagan said, "The way I work is to identify the problem, find the right individuals to do the job and then let them go to it." He said that system brings out the best in people and "in the long run you get more done."

However, he added, "when it came to managing the NSC staff, let's face it, my style didn't match its previous track record. I have already begun correcting this."

He pointed to his meeting Tuesday with his overhauled National Security Council staff and said he told them, "There'll be no more freelancing by individuals when it comes to our national security."

Looking back over the Iranian initiative, Reagan said, "One thing still upsetting me, however, is that no one kept proper records of meetings or decisions. This led to my failure to recollect whether I approved an arms shipment before or after the fact."

"I did approve it," Reagan said. "I just can't say specifically when."

The Tower commission said that Reagan, during one interview, said he had authorized an arms shipment in 1985, but then later changed his story and said during a second interview that he had not authorized it. Finally, Reagan wrote the board a letter a few days before its report was published and said that he simply could not remember.

tive in that area. It's hard to get publicity."

"If I Should Die" was shown last night to about 100 people at Memorial Hall. The film will be presented again at 8 tonight in Memorial Hall.

The slide show is one of six different ones produced by Paragon Productions, a division of Campus Crusade, which is touring the nation.

It is being shown at 500 campus chapters of the organization.

Chadwick said "If I Should Die" has already been shown at Eastern Kentucky University and Marshall University to more than 1,000 people.

Campus Crusade for Christ is an organization aimed at being a "resource for students on campus in a spiritual division of their lives," Chadwick said.

The 45-minute presentation consists of more than 1,100 slides projected onto three large screens from nine computerized projectors.

The message of "If I Should Die," which is relayed through the lyrics of both secular music and contemporary Christian music, portrays a relationship of a college-age couple whose lives are suddenly altered by a tragic accident.

"It definitely makes the average person stop and consider the reality that life doesn't go on forever," Chadwick said. "It can help you get your life into perspective."

Experience in FBI should help Webster clean up CIA image

If any organization in the country has an image problem, it's the Central Intelligence Agency.

At the same time, the CIA conjures up glorious visions of James Bond — licensed to kill — and not-so-glorious visions of killers, marauders, rapists, thugs and just plain evil human beings who have been supported as heads of governments by the efforts of our very own spy agency.

Without a doubt, the CIA's role in the protection of the United States against foreign aggressors — real or imagined — is an important one. It is naive to believe that in a world as complex and full of hatred and paranoia as ours that covert operations are anything but a necessary evil. By the very nature of its mission, a great deal of what the CIA does must remain a secret from the American public, hard as that may be to swallow in a country that is supposedly governed by that very public.

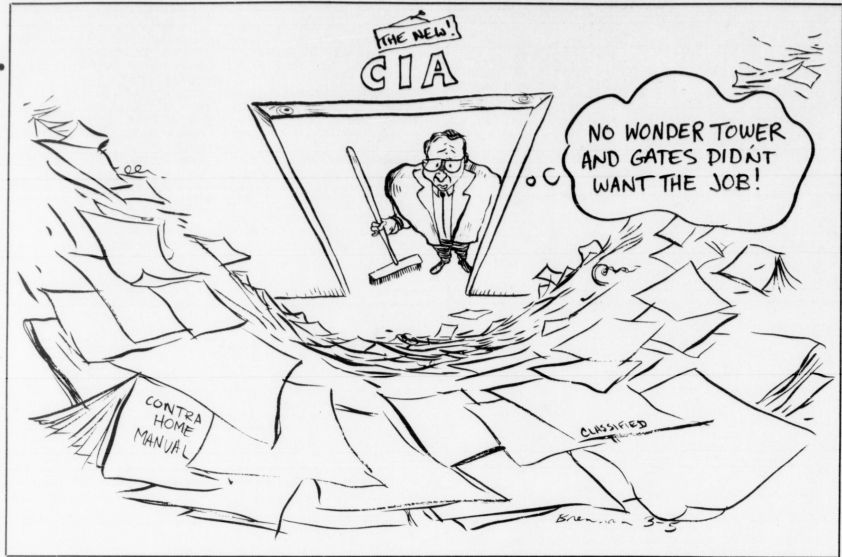

But while it must remain secretive to be effective, the CIA must also be able to command the respect — and above all the trust — of the people it is protecting.

That is why President Reagan's nomination of FBI Director William Webster to head the agency is a solid one.

Under J. Edgar Hoover and the years following his departure from the FBI, the bureau suffered many of the same scandals and dilemmas the CIA suffers now, including illegal break-ins conducted against domestic extremist groups.

Webster gained wide praise nine years ago for his role in restoring the integrity and reputation of the federal law enforcement agency, and apparently Reagan is hoping he can do the same with the CIA.

Another factor in Webster's favor is that he apparently had nothing to do with the Iran-contra affair. It was Robert Gates' — Reagan's first nominee to head the CIA — involvement with that deal that led him to withdraw his name from consideration.

Which might not have been such a bad idea in the first place. Gates is deputy director of the CIA, and little change in operations or perceptions could be expected if he were selected.

America's foreign relations and covert intelligence reputations have been tarnished at home and abroad. Maybe Webster is the man to turn those perceptions around.

With Roselle's qualifications, lobbying shouldn't be difficult

After spending more than 1,000 hours in 35 meetings sifting through 183 applications, they finally completed their "awesome" task and made a decision.

Tuesday afternoon, the UK Board of Trustees took the advice of the presidential search committee and unanimously selected David P. Roselle as UK's next president, ending more than seven months of name-guessing and speculation.

Roselle, provost of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, will become UK's ninth president on July 1, after Otis A. Singletary ends his immensely successful tenure at UK.

When the committee finally narrowed its lengthy list of prospective replacements to two candidates — Roselle and Charles T. Wethington Jr., chancellor for UK's community college system — the UK community finally received a real chance to help decide who it wanted to replace President Singletary.

Both candidates received high marks from the community, but Roselle's achievements in academics — the quality most vital to a university president — obviously made him stand out from his competitor. And many people realized that.

C.A. Duane BONIFER

However, despite Roselle's extremely impressive record and his superior educational background, some individuals could not move themselves to support the 47-year-old scholar. Instead, they gave their support to a community college chancellor.

The main grievance Wethington supporters had of Roselle was that he did not have the political experience needed to actively lobby in Frankfort on the University's behalf.

Roselle himself admitted that his ability to persuade those at the state capital may not be one of his strongest assets.

"I don't know if I could effectively lobby," Roselle said when he made his visit to campus, "but I would try to do it."

Trustee Tracy Farmer said that if Roselle's success with the board was indicative of his success with politics, people have nothing to worry about.

"If he can deal with this body successfully, he can deal with anything," Farmer said.

And newly appointed trustee Larry Forgy said Roselle was capable of effective lobbying.

"Roselle has the understanding of higher education, as well as the firmness to take the helm of the University," the former GOP gubernatorial hopeful said. "I have been in the political arena a little bit, and I can tell you without equivocation that he can function in (a political) environment."

When Wethington met with administrators, faculty and students, he pointed to his vast experience and knowledge of the Kentucky state legislative process as one of his major attributes.

He has a definite point.

In Kentucky, where state legislators received their current power and influence only eight years ago, an efficient lobbyist is a must for any special interest group — which is precisely what any institution is.

But being an effective lobbyist in Kentucky is almost, if not, a full-time post. Therefore, should a president of a university that has set its sights on becoming one of the nation's premier research and development institutions of the 1990s concern him or herself with politics?

Of course, some lobbying on certain issues and getting to know key political figures can be important, but why should the president spend a majority of his extremely precious time more than 30 miles away from the main campus?

If Roselle wants a political contact, he can turn to one of many Board of Trustee members.

Forgy, the fiery Lexington lawyer who "loves this place," is the person to go to if something needs to be done through the Republican Party.

Former U.S. Sen. Walter "Dee" Huddleston was also among the new board members who made their debut Tuesday. With Huddleston's experience on the state and national levels, the Elizabethtown native should prove a valuable Democrat to Roselle.

Although neither of these men is as active in the political world now as they were a few years ago, both know numerous people in Frankfort and Washington and would be more than eager to show Roselle the proper political course and perhaps even help carry out that plan for him.

That is what a president at a major university needs, especially when succeeding a president like Singletary.

When Roselle showed up at Tuesday's Board of Trustees meeting to accept his new position, he said he couldn't wait until July to officially take his new post.

The well-spoken scholar said being named president was "probably" one of the greatest honors in his life.

It may also be one of the greatest challenges of his life.

During his 18-year tenure at UK, Singletary took an average university and shaped it into a highly respected one. And now Roselle must continue to build on that tradition established by his predecessor. Lobbying is part of it, but it's only one ingredient to being a good administrator.

Concentrating on the main campus, such as getting to know and efficiently working with other members of the administration, faculty and, most importantly, students, is something else a full-time university president must do.

Another potential challenge that will face Roselle is the community college system.

At the board meeting, Wethington pledged his support for Roselle — and that's definitely a positive sign. With the friction that the main campus and the community colleges have experienced this year, the last thing this University needs is hard feelings between two of its most important administrators.

"I was looking for commitment and I found it," Roselle told the board.

It looks like UK has found it, too.

School spirit important at games but don't forget respect

I am writing in reply to an article that appeared in the Feb. 17 issue of the Kernel. The author complains of a group of students being ordered to sit down at a UK basketball game by someone from the dean of students office. This was due to the fact that there was apparently a "crowd" throwing ice and Coke down on the group of students standing up.

The writer contends that the "crowd" was too fat back and over to have their view blocked. Well, it just so happens that I can relate to this story — but in a different way. I believe the writer is referring to the section I was in because this same incident occurred where I was sitting. Now, here's the other side of it.

My first disagreement with the writer's view is that the section he was in contained one of the few large groups of fans in the entire arena who chose to support the Wildcats by standing up and cheering. I saw nearly everyone stand up and support the Wildcats; they just didn't stand the whole game.

I agree about the throwing of ice cubes and paper was down on his section. This is childish and completely uncalled for. However, this could have been prevented if his group would have responded to the "crowd" asking them to sit down. This doesn't mean that they had to sit down the whole game, but they didn't need to stand the whole game, either.

I agree . . . that we have the right to get excited about our school and our fellow students, but we must also show respect for each other.

Also, he obviously didn't see a Coke go flying back from the group standing into the upper deck. It also takes a little maturity on the part of the "standers" to sit down once in a while when asked by the "crowd," which they were before the trouble started.

Moreover, he really makes me laugh when he says that he "fails to see" how the "standers" could have been blocking the view of the "crowd." Well, I failed to see also — THE GAME, THAT IS. As long as I sat down, I couldn't see the game, and I believe that I was in the middle of the "crowd" that he is referring to.

Don't get me wrong. I love UK, and I love to go to the game and stand and cheer. But, it's nice to sit down once in a while, too. This was the first time that I encountered a problem like this at a basketball game, and never have I felt a lack of enthusiasm just because everyone wasn't constantly standing. Furthermore, he says, quote: "Perhaps the enthusiasm and excitement of a crowd has made the difference between a winning team and a losing one — between the basketball and football team." Personally, I believe personnel had made the difference between a winning team and a losing one. I see a lot of rowdy, supportive people when I go to the football games.

I agree with him that we have the right to get excited about our school and our fellow students, but we must also show respect for each other. That goes both ways in this case. What happened should never have happened. I had people in front and in back of me yelling at each other, almost starting what could have been a major brawl. As for the representative from the dean of students office ordering the "standers" to sit down, he must have been talking about the next week's game because I still didn't see anyone in front sitting down.

All I can say is don't blame it on any UK authority or lack of spirit. I see ever-increasing spirit at every game. What about "Happy" Chandler singing "My Old Kentucky Home," Jerry Claiborne making the "Y" in "KENTUCKY" at half-court? And what about the enthusiasm at the UK-Oklahoma game? The crowd stood up and cheered, but they also sat and showed tremendous support during a great game.

No, don't blame this incident on

UK officials or the other fans at the game. Blame it on two groups consisting of some immature people — the "standers" and the "crowd."

So next time any of you are at a game, STAND UP AND CHEER like a he says, but show some respect and compromise a little. After all, we are in college now, right?

Parking hazardous

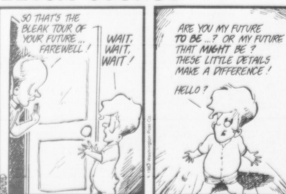

We are writing in regards to the employee-paid parking lots made available by UK. During the recent snow and ice storm in Lexington, we employees who made an effort to be at work as scheduled experienced hazardous parking conditions.

We believe that if the University is open for classes, etc., it should at least clean the ice and snow from the parking lots so employees can park safely. The "B" parking lot on South Limestone is a perfect example of a "hazardous parking area."

Tennis team knocks off Evansville

By DAN BURCH
Contributing Writer

The Kentucky men's tennis team has reached its highest ranking ever, moving up four notches to 14th position in the national Head Intercollegiate Tennis Standings.

"I'm thrilled for our players and coaches," Kentucky coach Dennis Emery said yesterday after his team defeated Evansville University 7-2 at the Seaton Center courts.

"Kentucky tennis is on the move, and we are no longer a team to be taken for granted. We proved that against Stanford."

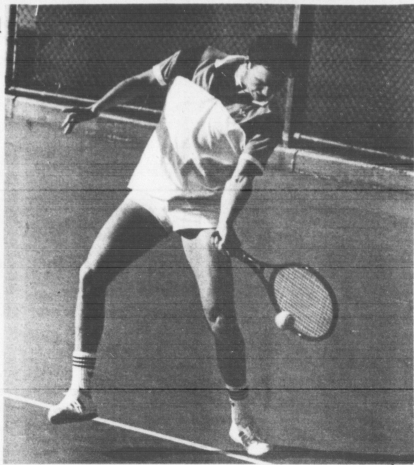

In February, the Wildcats upset the defending NCAA Champion Cardinal team, 5-4, at theUSTA-ITCA National Team Indoor Championships in Louisville.

The UK men's team is led by sophomore Richard Benson and junior Greg Van Emburgh. Benson is currently ranked 41st in the nation and Van Emburgh anchors the 58th spot.

The doubles duo of Benson-Van Emburgh are currently ranked seventh in the country.

Yesterday, freshman sensation Adam Malik led the UK charge against Evansville. Malik defeated Evansville's Brian Poynter, 6-1, 6-2, at the No. 1 singles spot.

Kentucky senior Steve Denney knocked off David Petrie in the No.

UK's Steve Denney returns the ball during yesterday's match against Evansville. UK won the match, 7-2.

2 singles match, 7-6, 6-2. David Keenins, a UK senior, squeaked by Evansville's Dick Waterfall, 7-6, 6-2, at the No. 3 spot.

Kentucky seniors Keith Cook and Andrew Varga earned victories at the No. 4 and No. 5 singles spots. Cook beat Evansville's Barry Ru-beck, 6-3, 1-6, 6-3, and Varga won over Matt Fehn, 6-1, 6-1.

The only Kentucky loss in the singles matches was at the No. 6 spot, where Evansville's Ben Battcock beat UK sophomore Frank Wolny, 6-2, 4-6, 6-3.

Lady Kats annihilate Florida 75-53 in first round of SEC Tournament

MIKE SCHWEITZER
Contributing Writer

ALBANY, Ga. — The UK Lady Kats jumped out early on the Florida Lady Gators last night when Bebe Croley broke a 4-4 tie at the 16:54 mark with two free throws.

The Kats never looked back after that, as they cruised to a 75-53 win in the first round of the Southeastern Conference Tournament.

"We went with our height in this game," UK coach Terry Hall said. UK improved its record to 17-10, while the Lady Gators ended their season on a losing note with a 12-16 mark.

After turning in one of its best first half performances of the season, UK took a commanding 43-26 halftime lead into the locker room.

However, when the second half got under way, the Kats came out rather sluggish until they remedied their problem and got back on course.

"We started the second half playing disorganized, but we settled down and executed our offense much better," Hall said.

"We had a really big edge with our height," said Croley, who led all scorers with 18 points.

The Kats will now take on the Lady Bulldogs of Georgia, the tournament's second seed, at 7 tonight. Friday night UK closed its regular season when the Lady Bulldogs handed the Kats a 73-64 defeat.

To avenge that loss, Hall said UK will have to be much more consistent with its play and force the Lady Bulldogs into a transition game.

"We'll have to run the ball better and hopefully, we'll press better," she said. "We must make them run the full length of the floor to win. Right now, we're playing as well as we have all year, and we're playing team ball."

Hall thinks tonight's game is vital for the Kats to make it into the NCAA postseason tournament.

"I think we have to win two" to get into the tournament, she said.

Aside from Croley's game-leading 18, four other Lady Kats hit double-digits.

The Lady Gators were led by Susan Stoddard and Lisa Born, who each had 12 points, respectively and Janna Bragg chipped in with 10 points.
