

Statistics 292: more bear than bunny

By NELL FIELDS
Kernel Staff Writer

If you're really dying to fail a test, take Statistics 292.

Dr. Peter Purdue, associate professor of statistics, said, "In the neighborhood of 400 people took the final exam and 10 to 15 per cent failed." These percentages were based on curve.

The failures don't appear to be large, but this class is an elementary course, required for all business and economics, accounting, and social profession majors.

Elementary statistics is a three-in-one course. The first five weeks, students take Statistics 292.

In this class, they are given the recommended three quizzes. At the end of this mini-course, they take the final. If they pass, they go on to 293.

The same procedure is used for 293 so the students can move on to the long-awaited 294.

Mike Pittenger, a sophomore accounting major who took the 292 final exam, said, "After the test, no one knew whether they passed or not. We were just glad that it was over."

"I thought a lot of the questions were vague," he said. "Some of the teachers admitted that they didn't cover all of the material that was on the test."

That was not the only trouble with the test, Pittenger said. "My teacher (Werner Merkil) admitted that some of the test questions were different than what he taught us in class. He said that was because those questions came out of books that the class used to use a couple of years ago."

According to Purdue, the test was made up by the people who taught the classes. Purdue was the coordinator.

"The supervisors in each section met with the teaching assistants (TAs) before the exam. The TAs gave the supervisors 10 questions for the exam, which was held on Oct. 3," he said.

Visiting professor Normand Johnson from UCLA, who also teaches 292, elaborated on exactly how the test was formulated.

"The test was based on questions used over the past few years," he said. "Some new ones were added, but by and large, the questions came from a computer."

Johnson admitted the TAs and professors never held a meeting.

He did say, however, "The supervisors discussed the questions and threw a few out. Sometimes we didn't catch questions that we didn't go over."

Johnson thought the test was fair. However, "I must admit," he said, "some of the questions were vague."

Johnson, a section supervisor, never read the final draft of the exam.

The students were allowed to use crib sheets during the exams.

"The crib sheets helped," said Tammy Disco, an accounting major.

If we didn't have them everyone would have failed. But the class went so fast, we never had time to understand the formulas. I couldn't use formulas that I didn't understand."

Because some students failed, a make-up test was provided Monday night. Both Pittenger and Disco took the make-up final.

Cheerleaders' plight They claim lack of support

By REBECCA PREM
Kernel Reporter

According to UK cheerleaders Cherie Davis and Darrell Fischer, they have to really "love" the activity to tolerate what Davis calls a lack of support, particularly financial, from the athletic department.

A co-captain of the cheerleaders, Davis said, "Our budgets supposed to cover uniforms, transportation, food, chaperones and other expenses for both football and basketball."

"They give us $6,000 and expect us to be at every game to please the alums. They don't seem to realize we care about all the trouble we go to.

They don't even provide us with a car.

"I think we need more money," she said.

Fischer, also a co-captain, said he has had to arrange many away trips.

"Last year at the Kansas game I had to arrange everything. We weren't even sure we had the money to go. At the last minute we found out, and I had to find chaperones and transportation," he said.

According to Cliff Hagan, athletic director, cheerleaders are given a sum of money to be spent any way they want. "The cheerleaders may choose any game they can afford," he said.

"I have nothing else to say. If you have any more questions, ask the cheerleaders. I'm too busy."

Colonel James Alcorn, adviser to the cheerleaders, also refused to comment.

Davis said Alcorn and Hagan are "too busy to be sponsors. We have 12 cheerleaders and one mascot. They (Alcorn and Hagan) probably don't even know all of us."

"And for people they don't even know, they treat us like children. We have to have chaperones. Twenty-one and 22-year-old adults with chaperones."

Unable to work with the funds from the athletic department, the cheerleaders are also unable to help themselves by raising money.

Discount cards to be available next week today

By PHILIP RUTLEDGE

About 23,000 buying power cards will be distributed to UK students by the Student Government (SG) early next week. They won't cost anything, but will give discounts at 11 area stores, according to SG President Jim Newberry.

The Student Buying Power Card is the product of L & B Marketing, Inc. of Bayside, N.Y., and according to L & B vice-president Jack Thornely, already have been distributed to about 600 colleges across the country.

Newberry said SG will deliver them to dormitories, fraternities and sororities, and will make the cards available in the Student Center for students living off campus.

When an L & B representative contacted SG in July to propose the plan, Newberry said he got in touch with three colleges that had distributed cards to their students.

The colleges reported good results.

Thornely said L & B has been involved "in this particular program for a little over two years. It had been tried by other companies, but with little success before we started."

"We funnel students into local stores that will save them money," he said.

Bob Schlinger, manager of Sage School of the Outdoors, said the cards are intended to "turn students to businesses oriented toward students."

Other stores that offer students discounts include: Naples Pizza & Italian Restaurant, Geno's Formal Affair, Autowize The Parts Place, Lynn's Hair House, Mr. Magic Car Wash, Up Your Alley, Moore's Tire and Service Center, WaterHead, Inc., The Plant Shed and Kennedy's Book Store.

"I don't know how frequently students use any of these places," Newberry said, "but if the need ever does arise, it will be that much saved."

Brookside miners victimized by union, operators

By MARGARET ROACH

I'm sure no one took Tim Slone's commentary "UMWA is a Disease" seriously, but there are some important errors in fact and omissions that should be cleared up. Slone states that his father began working at the Brookside mine in 1970, but fails to mention that his father was in management, which might help explain his perspective.

I participated in the Brookside Support Committee, have friends at Brookside, attended rallies and picket lines in Harlan and have found that the actual situation at

The Southern Labor Union is a company union which works with local coal operators to prevent the UMWA from organizing non-union mines particularly in Eastern Kentucky and Tennessee. Once SLU is set up in a mine the coal operators can use it to keep out the UMWA, and to sell coal to the Tennessee Valley Authority, which buys only from union mines.

Many non-union mines are willing to pay union-scale wages and benefits in order to keep a genuine union of miners out. That is why UMWA safety committees have become more and more the main

commentary

Brookside was quite different than the picture Slone paints.

His first claim is that Eastover Mining Company began remodeling their coal houses in 1969. But as of 1974, the time of the strike, these houses were inadequate, too small for a family of four and often without indoor plumbing.

Slone implies that the UMWA consists of "outside agitators." Actually, the union was requested to come to Brookside, as they had been requested to come to Stearns, by the miners themselves, who believed the Southern Labor Union (SLU, a Tennessee-based operation) was a phony company union.

Slone claims that safety conditions were top-notch at the Duke-owned mines. But at Brookside, under the SLU, the disability injury rate was three times the national average in 1971 and twice the national average in 1972. At Stearns, operator Diamond Coal had over 100 mine safety violations in 1975 and the rate doubled in 1976. The SLU, at that time, also "represented" the Stearns miners.

Contrary to Slone's denials, there is an average of one coal miner killed per working day in this country's mines, according to the Department of Labor statistics. The accidents are not the miners' fault, it is the coal companies who are unwilling to improve safety conditions that sentence hundreds of miners to death each year.

The miners at Brookside under the SLU, as at Stearns, had no seniority or job protection. Hospitals would not honor bankrupt SLU medical cards. Under the SLU contract at Brookside, miners were not paid for the time traveling underground to the work site. They traveled the first part by mine car and then crawled on hands and knees through the 40-inch seam. This unpaid trip lasted around an hour.

issue in strikes. Coal companies would rather pay high wages than pay for safety upkeep in the mines, risking production loss due to UMWA safety committee-authorized walkouts in dangerous portions of the mines.

SLU's true colors were shown at Brookside May 3, 1974 when its president, Paul Byrge, offered UMWA striking miners $5,000 to end the strike. Tape recordings and photographs of that offer were arranged by the miners and filed with the National Labor Relations Board by the UMWA.

That the Brookside Women's Club was instrumental in winning the strike was no discredit to the men. They walked the picket line when the miners were under court order not to. The women did not "pretend" to be in jail, as Slone implies. They were arrested, tried without a jury and jailed by Judge Byrd Hogg, himself a coal operator. When some were told their children would be placed in foster homes, they brought their children with them.

Besides the daily threat of violent mine accidents and slow death through black lung, what do miners have to face when on strike? Slone fails to mention the numerous and flagrant acts of violence initiated by Eastover.

UMWA president Mickey Messer's house was riddled with bullets. Three striking miners were shot at by a mine employee. An unarmed, retired miner, 66, was shot by a mine "security guard." The perpetrators of anti-union violence were rarely punished by the coal operator-dominated legal system in Harlan County.

These incidents and many others were documented before a citizens public inquiry panel which included former Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz and Senator Fred Harris. It was after the tragic death of Lawrence Jones, killed by an Eastover supervisor that a contract was finally signed. The foreman who shot Jones was released by a grand jury—two operators and two operators' wives were on the jury. Miners and their supporters picketed another Eastover-owned mine at Highspoint when the company refused to negotiate. Two-thirds of theminers there supported the UMWA. It was when the company opened machine-gun fire on the picketers that they moved the picket line to a public highway out of firing range.

The miners at Brookside and now at Stearns do not want violence, but neither will they see the law and courts flagrantly side with the operators and refuse to fight back, nor will they refuse to defend themselves against gun thugs and convicted felons. They are fighting literally for their livelihood and their lives. A repeat of Brookside is now going on at Stearns, where the state police are being used as strike-breakers and are intensifying violence against the miners. The miners deserve our support.

Asks bus reform

The buses going back and forth from the stadium to central campus are frequently and dangerously crowded.

Several weeks ago I witnessed what I understand is a record-breaking event (I invite other documented challenges). On my morning bus from the stadium to central campus, 12 students shared the floor and step space in front of the white floor line plus the driver, making 13. Rumor has it that the white line was not developed for riders to play sardines, but was originally intended as a safety warning.

I lost another bet recently. Twice I bet that arriving at the stadium at 10:20 a.m. would ensure my getting to class by 11. Try 11:10. My last class ends at 2:50 p.m. I have tried in vain to reach the stadium by 3:30 while three overcrowded buses have gone by unable to pick up central campus passengers.

Perhaps the current packing of buses is designed to prepare us for the winter rain and snow. It offers generous practice for squeezing into the inadequate bus shelters. Or maybe a subtler motive is involved. Forty minutes spent waiting outdoors in inclement weather might be expected to increase the pneumonia rate—effectively reducing bus overcrowding by reducing the number of healthy students.

At least two steps must be taken to correct this problem.

(1) Study the need for bus transportation by thoroughly and accurately documenting student use by time of day, day of week, in a variety of weather. Then, increase bus service as appropriate.

(2) Reassess the current bus routes. How about two express buses running between the stadium and central campus with one bus specifically for the dormitory community? It is ridiculous that an already overcrowded bus from the Stadium must spend several extra minutes stopping for 2-3 students at each dormitory. It might be possible to add an additional round trip per hour by the practical re-routing.

Simple limitation of the number of students to ride a given bus is not acceptable. More bus space is needed—urgently. Shelters must be reassessed.

I hope that those who grumble and suffer with me on these daily bus rides will take pen in hand to reinforce this need by pressuring Student Government representatives and the University administration to act.

For fraternity

In this age of national and multinational corporations, bigness has invaded almost every aspect of life. This has become very true right here on the UK campus. Nothing is small anymore and nothing is smaller to the local community.

There is at least one local organization that is a challenge and good not its inactive social fraternity.

Alpha Phi Iota is a local fraternity that is surviving, even prospering, on a campus dominated by large regional and international fraternities.

Alpha Phi Iota is unique in that, although there are two chapters, they are both within the same university system. The original chapter is located at Ashland Community College. Last year the second chapter of the fraternity was started here.

A core of about 15 alumni of the chapter in Ashland, who came to this campus to complete their course work, started in early 1976 to put together an organization that could survive the competition of some 20 other fraternities that had national or international ties.

The odds weren't good. It was hard work and luck that got the group started with its first pledge class in the fall of 1976. The fall rush was the culmination of a summer of work by the group to rent the house from the University at 248 E. Maxwell and get in shape.

Since that time, after going through what is best described as a cold, lean winter, the group headed into warm weather with an enthusiasm to show the world that there was still a place for a local fraternity, geared to one university and one group of people.

But at every corner they are faced with what at first appear to be drawbacks to a person looking for a fraternity that is right for him. There are not chapters all over the country, and the number of alumni, especially in the Lexington area, is small.

But upon closer investigation you will see that the local chapter has complete control of its affairs, with no interference from a national organization. Without the burden of supporting a national office, the dues and fees can be correspondingly lower.

Everything about the fraternity is locally oriented and it is within the power of the chapter to change anything that needs change for the local situation.

To be sure, membership in a local fraternity is a challenge and good leaders are always being sought, but the rewards of taking on such a challenge can be great as well.

Dislikes cartoon

I have been a supporter of the Kernel since I transferred here last year. There have been times that personally distasteful articles have appeared, but I never considered it important enough to respond until now. William Fugate's "cartoon" of Billy Graham's dog (Oct. 18) so offended and infuriated me that I had to write. This poor attempt at satire, humor or whatever it was meant to be shows a complete and gross misunderstanding and disrespect for the Lord Jesus Christ and the work of Billy Graham is doing in his name. It makes a mockery of part of the most important event in history and is deeply offensive to anyone who knows God and calls Jesus Christ their Lord and Saviour. I am surprised the Kernel is even still carrying this series after the controversy about this "art" in the past. Mr. Fugate, Jesus Christ is a matter of life and death, and I pray you will realize that the God of this world is not to be mocked in a cheap attempt to get a couple of laughs.

City elections coming up

By KEN KAGAN

Election day in Lexington is Nov. 8.

While the race for mayor has been vocal and at times hotly contested, the race for Urban County Council seats has been relatively tranquil, even "anonymous" in the opinion of candidate Donald Blevins.

UCC has 12 districts with one representative each, and three council members at-large. District seats have two-year terms, and the three at-large seats have four-year terms.

Of principal interest to students are the third, fourth and fifth districts, which all border the UK campus or contain streets where many students live.

The third district, represented by Bill Bingham who is running for re-election, extends from Forbes Road on the west end to Rose Street on the east end, and from Waller Avenue on the south end to Second Street on the north end.

Bingham's opponent is Joe Jasper.

The fourth district was represented by Pam Miller, but she has announced she won't run for re-election. Ann Gabbard and Paul Schuette oppose each other for that seat.

The fourth district covers the area from the Medical Center and Commonwealth Stadium on the north to Zandale Drive on the south, and from Harrodsburg Road on the west to Tales Creek Road on the east. All descriptions of the districts are approximations because the boundaries do not follow uniform patterns.

The fifth district contains the Woodland Park area, where many students live. It has been represented by Mary Mangione, who is running against Kenneth Clevidence for the seat.

Voters will elect three at-large members from a list of six. The six are Donald Blevins, who since 1974 has represented the tenth district, Ann Ross, Edgar Wallace, Jim Todd, Carl Combs and George Herman Kendall.

Aside from enjoying a longer term, an at-large member's advantage is that he or she could be selected for the position of vice mayor, a post now held by Scotty Baesler.

Cheerleaders complain

"Hagan says it looks bad for UK. Well, what about all the times we had to buy the opposition's cheerleaders Cokes out of our own pockets, and they (athletic department) will never pay us back?" Fischer said.

"Or why don't we have a restroom? They said they'd give us a Port-o-let, but we'd have to pay for it ourselves."

And, says Davis, "North Carolina brought 17 cheerleaders with them. They flew them here.

"And Hagan tells us that as long as we have six cheerleaders with us so the alums won't complain, then that's enough."

But, she added, "What can you do with six people?"

No. 8 Cats face Dogs

By DAVID HIBBITTS
Sports Editor

Can the Kentucky Wildcats continue to ride the crest of the wave which has carried them to four consecutive wins over one-time nationally ranked teams, when they travel to Athens, Ga. this weekend?

In Athens, Kentucky must face another Homecoming celebration, by the football loyal Georgia Bulldogs contingent this week.

The 1977 edition of Vince Dooley's perennial Southeastern Conference contenders is saddled with only a 4-2 overall and a 2-1 SEC record entering tomorrow's game.

another game like the one he had last week (18 tackles against Vanderbilt) should move him into the number one spot.

Georgia head coach Vince Dooley, who has built a reputation for running up the score on his opponents (last year's 31-7 win over the Cats was much closer than the final score indicated), was loquacious in his praise of Kentucky this year.

Its defense has been Georgia's saving grace in a season that has just recently produced two straight wins, 14-13 over Ole Miss and a 24-13 rally against Vandy.

The Bulldog defense ranks third in the conference (Kentucky's is first), allowing only 265.7 yards a game. Its rushing defense leads the SEC with a 131.2 average.

It seems he remembers UK's knocking at the door at the end of last week's 33-13 trouncing of LSU.

"Offensively, they line up shoe to shoe and knock you off the ball," Dooley said. "Derrick Ramsey may be the best athlete at quarterback in the SEC. He may be weak in his passing game early in his career, but he has worked hard in becoming a fine and effective passer."

Seven starters return from last year's unit which gave up only 10.5 points a game. Ben Zambiasi, a senior linebacker, has led Georgia in tackles for the last two years. He continues to dominate opposing offenses with a team-leading 83 tackles this year.

Bill Krug, a senior rover, was pictured on Playboy's All-American team this fall and was picked the national lineman of the week for his effort in Georgia's 21-0 shellacking of Alabama last year.

Ronnie Swopes, a senior defensive tackle, is second on the team with 82 tackles, and

Kevin McLee (484 yards in 119 carries), Willie McClendon (402 in 80) and Jeff

As the fall social season begins, there's one dim spot in an otherwise bright whirl: inflation.

Inflation plays few favorites so increasing costs for putting on the dog and having a good time apply to just about everything.

The findings of a comparison of formal dance costs now and 10 years ago will surprise no one. Look at tuxedos.

A tux at Geno's 10 years ago rented for $15. Today it costs $30 to $35. A clerk at the store observed, however, "There's really not much single tux rentals anymore. Instead of blowing $30 for one night, guys would rather go out and spend their money on Budweiser."

At Gingiss the tax rental rate has risen $6 in seven years, from $12 to $38. But like Geno's, the shop doesn't have a lot of tax business because "most of the guys wear suits," said a salesperson.

For many college women, a formal is a good excuse to buy a new dress. Alas, however, "like everything else they've gone up (in price)," said a Stewart's employee.

Most department store salespersons noted an increase of about $10 for formal dresses in the last 10 years.

Even the quaint corsages cost more, for those who still buy them. A clerk at Chevy Chase Florist said, "The average corsage today costs $7, if you're talking roses and carnations. Ten years ago they ran from $4 to $4.50."

Employees at Ashland Florist quote even larger increases during the last 10 years. "People today pay four times more for boutonnières and corsages."

And wining and dining before or after the formal can run up a bill substantially higher than it was a decade ago.

Pitenger received a D on the first exam, but as in all cases, his teacher advised him to take the make-up for a possible better grade.

"I thought the test (the make-up) was easier, but still a lot of the questions were vague," he said.

If students passed the make-up test, they will be able to pick up the 230 class in a trailer course. The 294 class will have been taken next semester.

Johnson provided some figures after the make-up was taken. "First of all, there were a lot of people who were scheduled to take the test who never showed up. Out of the 90-plus people who were allowed to take the exam, only 30 actually took it. After the curve, all but eight got passing grades," he said.

According to most of the statistic teachers, this elementary class is not hard.

So what is the real problem with this class? Mike Pitenger had one explanation: "This is a basic class. Teachers don't like to teach it, therefore they do a lousy job. How else can you explain the mistakes in the test questions and the number of students who failed?"

But, says Johnson, "How am I expected to teach a class to students who aren't motivated?"

House management acknowledges a 150 per cent increase in dinner prices there.

But Levas' management said it hasn't had a noticeable inflation trend. Said one employee, "Our prices haven't gone up appreciably over the last several years. However, that (trend) may come to a screeching halt due to spiraling costs for us."

But don't let this expensive talk deter anyone from pursuing the social scene. Inflation doesn't apply to what some would call the most important part of having a good time: booze.

"Most liquor prices increase only 10 cents a year," said a clerk at the Chevy Store. "A fifth that cost $5 10 years ago probably costs only $5.55 today."

"In the last two years, Early Times hasn't even gone up a nickel."

I've long since retired and my son's moved away, I called him up just the other day. I said I'd like to see you if you don't mind, he said I'd love to Dad if I can find the time. But the new job's a hassle and the kid's got the flu, but it's been real nice talking to you, dad. It's been real nice talkin to you...And as I hung up the phone it ocured to me, my boy was just like me. He'd grown up just like me.

When ya coming home, Dad I don't know when, but we'll get together then Storyteller Harry Chapin takes the stage Tuesday night as the feature attraction for the 1977 UK Homecoming Concert. Also on the bill is his brother Tom Chapin.

Tickets for the 8 p.m. concert in Memorial Coliseum are still available. Admission is only $5 for reserved seats.

Harry Chapin dates back to the early 70's when he first gained notoriety through the storytelling nature of his songs. The fact that his tales were set to music was only incidental.

Chapin's storytelling ability is illustrated in his three biggest hits. "Taxi" is the tale of a lonely taxi driver, the people he meets and his reactions to them, as well as the state of his personal life.

"W-O-L-D" describes the frustrations of a family man who escapes his wife and children by becoming the morning disc jockey for an FM radio station.

"Cat's In The Cradle" has been his biggest hit to date. Chapin put to music a story in which many people were able to see their own personal lives. A youngster worships his father's every move and despite being left in the rear of his father's busy world, declares that he'll grow up and be "just like him."

And when his father reaches a point in life where he finally has time to sit and begin to know his son, he can't. You see, his son had become "just like him."

Chapin's latest album, Dance Band on the Titanic is being called the best of his career but is receiving only minimal airplay. This is not unusual for Chapin as only one of his six previous albums has gone gold, the 1974 Varities and Balderdash from which "Cats In The Cradle" was taken.

He has always garnered praise for his concerts. The atmosphere that he generates in concert has never been duplicated in the studio. During the course of an evening, Chapin will get his audience involved, hand-clapping and singing alongs are standard fare with "30,000 Pounds of Bananas" being the favorite.

Brother Tom is best known for his five year stint as the host of the ABC Saturday morning show, Make A Wish. Since then, the singer has been touring across the country both with and without his older brother.

After an April concert in Cincinnati, The Cincinnati Enquirer said, "...it will not be long before those 'son of' and 'brother of' references will be unnecessary. Tom is a better singer, songwriter and entertainer than Harry. His voice is clearer and smoother, and his songs can be moving or carefree and still capture their intended emotion in fewer words and cleaner melodies than Harry's."

The Roanoke Times said it best in explanation of a Tom Chapin concert. "We let our defenses down for Chapin. It was a night to feel good, to pull our lovers close and dream. For those of us not so lucky, it was a time to hope."

Norman Blake plays first Mini-Concert

Bluegrass guitarist Norman Blake will perform in the year's first Mini-Concert on November 5. Tickets for the Memorial Hall concert, which will also feature Blake's wife Nancy, will go on sale Monday, Oct. 24 in SC 203 for $3 each. The concert is being sponsored the Student Center Board Concert Committee. Only 800 tickets are available with general admission seating.

New and improved 'Macbeth' opens Wednesday

A modern rendition of MacBeth will open this Wednesday night as the second play of the 1977-78 season. The UK Theatre production will stage a psychological portrait of human greed and violence.

The William Shakespeare classic will be performed in the Guignol Theatre from October 26-29. The theatre is located in the Fine Arts Building. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Shakespeare's plot revolves around the short lived-success of the newly crowned King of Scotland (MacBeth), who acquired power through murdering the good King Duncan.

After yielding to the evil temptations of murder suggested by the three fates and even his wife, Lady Macbeth, the king loses grip on life and reality when he finds the foulness he used to gain power playing a cruel and bitter revenge.

MacBeth has long been one of the most widely interpreted of any Shakespearian plays, the UK production will offer a combination of the classical ideas at the heart of the original play along with the visual theatricality of modern theatre.

The production is being directed by Dr. John B. Lynaugh, who has assembled a cast of 15 players from all areas of academics.

The play's set was designed and lit scenically by Gvozden Kopani, with costumes by Mary A. Stephenson.

The box office of the Guignol is open Monday thru Friday 12 noon to 4:30 p.m. For more information call 257-2797.
