Editorial Comment

MORAL AND SPIRITUAL VALUES

Teachers today are concerned with developing the whole child. This places squarely on the shoulders of the school the responsibility of teaching, not only the traditional subject matter courses, but also the discovery and development of moral and spiritual values. This discovery and development of moral and spiritual values is a necessity if we are to provide the child with the framework for achieving the "Good Life."

This responsibility for the achievement of the "Good Life" is a responsibility that we have left, for the most part, to our religious institutions and other outside agencies. We have allowed this facet of the child's education to develop without stimulating experiences that will enrich his appreciation of moral and spiritual values. If we are to properly develop these values, then every phase of the school's program must be utilized to provide experiences that will emphasize the value of living a moral and spiritual life.

A GREAT PRESIDENT

Seldom does one find a person who gives all for a cause. In our retiring president, R. L. Dowery, we find a man who through the years has made great sacrifices for the betterment of education in Kentucky. He has reached the apex of his service by showing great leadership during a trying period of our Association.

In spite of personal and family illness that has plagued him throughout his administration, he has drawn together the Association into a strong and working organization. The officers and membership of the KNEA thank him sincerely.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT

Arline B. Allen, Primary Teacher, Louisville, Chairman

The primary department will confine its activities to an exhibit in Dunbar School at 9th and Magazine Streets. There will be charts, bulletins, seatwork and workbooks on display. This will embrace work carried on from kindergarten through the third grade. A great deal of it might be helpful to slow children in the upper grades.

Vote while you are viewing the exhibit—for chairman and an area of concentration for next year.
