ROWDYISM

"Giving 'em the fireworks" is the latest indoor sport of some youthful aspirants to gang fame in Kentucky. If college students continue to be so childishly susceptible to the influence of the current scanda sheets, motion pictures and radio announcements concerning the derring of the Chicago gangsters we wish that they would go to Chicago and stay there. In their language, "scram," in case they no longer understand conventional English.

Several theories have been volunteered as to the cause of this fiery epoch in the social life of the university. One of them is that one of those eternally sleepy students had just come to and thought that fourth of July celebrations were in order, in other words, he mistook the first basketball game for the annual country fair gathering. At the Pan Hellenic dance it was rumored that some child, hoping to discover if there was a Santa Claus, outraged the dignity of everyone there and disgraced himself just to see if Santa would put ashes and switches in his stockings. However, theories cannot justify such outrages as have been committed during the past few social events. Only a collegiate theory could attempt to justify a collegiate act and these are not collegiate acts, they are far too childish.

In the future if this lamentable state of affairs continues it will be necessary for every collegian to carry his "32" to all social functions in order to protect himself. Pistols have been in evidence at the past few basketball games, though not in self-defense. Many people are killed every year by firearms which are supposedly not loaded. We do not want the ultimate end of such childish pranks to be disastrous.

Shades of '49, the only gold rush now occurring is that which the effervescent co-ed is carrying on, guns are not necessary, fire crackers can shed no light on it, noise cannot frighten it away. However, if people persist in carrying fire arms to basketball games there should be a legislation to the effect that they should be allowed to fire these only out in the wide open spaces. Several fraternity houses are known to have the courtesy to restrain their gang instincts until the people across the street are indoors and then to fire a friendly volley of good-night shots. If fraternities can be thought of in small matters like shooting up the neighborhood, why can't others be so?

Sport is the greatest of college diversions. People who enjoy it should be allowed to do so. Kentucky cannot have a good basketball team when rosters do their best to destroy the unity which is the strength of a team. It is their duty to their alma mater either to stay home or come and boost the team. Furthermore it is the duty of every university student to see that these thoughtless persons either stay out of the gymnasium or are put out, that if these children of both college and grammar school who have been reprimanded by the authorities persist in disturbing the game they should be sent home and not allowed to attend any games.

These attempts at being hideously collegiate have outraged every principle of society. They have insulted the traditions of civilized society. They have struck at the very foundation of the university, they have insulted President McVey. An insult to the president of a university is to the students what an insult to the president of the United States is to the citizens of the nation. It is an outrage which only a radical, anarchist, or a foreigner would commit and should be punished as such. It is a crime almost unheard of, in fact the very shock of the incident has shaken and upset the student body to such an extent that they have not been able to collect themselves to present an organized attack. A modern college is standing aghast with horror. The time has come when action is necessary and the outraged student body is the only unit which has the strength to act.

As a student body let us cooperate and act, let us help the authorities put a definite end to this childish foolishness which has invaded the university. The students are the only ones who are in a position to know who the guilty parties are and could most effectively control such persons. It is a debt which we owe our alma mater, we cannot have its dignity shattered and we cannot have its integrity violated by any more hideously collegiate attempts at cleverness.

THE AMERICAN

It seems to us that Anne Marie Freund, an exchange student from Germany at a New England college for women, says some very pertinent points in her essay "America and Americans" which won first prize recently in a contest conducted by the Institute of International Relations. Miss Freund looks on us with the eyes of a stranger within our gates and arrives at some interesting conclusions. Following are excerpts from her winning essay:

"My first and perhaps my greatest surprise here was to find that the American does not exist. When I had to live weeks and months with the same people, I detected the fact that the uniform opinions went only a short way, the uniform phrases not much further, and that underneath and behind them existed almost as much variety as in my own country. In a country where a constant process of assimilation is going on, where a comparatively small bulk of old inhabitants is faced by a continuous influx of immigrants, and where a thin layer of people of secure economic status, well educated and with established standards of civilization has to absorb an ever renewed stream of people who have worked their way up from a class with a different, or no cultural background, and for whom education in the widest sense and economic security are new things, uniformity would be the demand of the old established families. They will admit the newcomers into their society only if they consent to conform to their customs and ideas. Now, uniformity is not easily and certainly not rapidly achieved; uniformity of outward appearance and of expression in every day occurrences much more easily and more rapidly. And the outcome would be the explanation of my previous idea of the American.

"Seen from a distance, there is too much that is common to all Europeans that it makes them appear as one nation when confronted with the American nation. An American who does Europe in three weeks cannot but look at it more or less like one large museum. So, he reacts toward Europe as a whole, not toward Italy, Germany or France as separate nations. I have learned that students here and students abroad are two completely different things. The American student will seem less interested and less mature, but a ready comrade, having a knowledge of practical things, a frankness in admitting ignorance. I know that not all Americans are rich, but on the whole, money is the magic wand that opens all doors, the one desire of all."

THEN HE'D UNDERSTAND

Why not let parents substitute for their children in school or college occasionally? That novel proposal has been made both seriously and facetiously. Judged by a recent test it has practical advantages. In this case a young man student in a large university was unable to attend classes for a month. To avoid her falling behind in her work, her mother went to the city, took her daughter's rooms, attended all her lectures, got acquainted with her daughter's classmates and added considerably to her circle of friends. And now the daughter finds that she can make up what she missed very easily. The mother, for her part, greatly enjoyed the experience and thinks that "parents need to study more."

Just suppose the idea should spread! It has possibilities. But if parental substitution should become a feature of modern education, should it be limited to mothers? One would like especially to see John T. Middleage, broker, weighing 197 pounds, in son's shorts going out for track and trying to do 100 yards in eleven flat—we mean eleven seconds flat, no father flat! One wonders if father could get at the office, and focus attention till midnight on calculus or Greek, instead of on the financial or sporting pages of the evening paper.

The plan has great possibilities. But there is one question which rather bothers us. When in the course of human events—such as the exhaustion of the budget or the purchase of text books or contributions to the new fraternity house and to the entertainment of the girl friends—it became necessary to wire father for a supplementary remittance "because of unforeseen expenses this month"—what would father do then?

—The Princetonian.

STEPPING INTO A MODERN WORLD JANUARY 1936 Charting tomorrow's telephone needs Looking ahead—laying a firm foundation for tomorrow's telephone service has long been a keystone policy of the Bell System. To illustrate: business starts creeping into a residential district—a sign that greatly increased telephone facilities will be required. Through intensive studies, commercial engineers forecast the needs of five or more years hence with scientific accuracy. Additional exchanges, cable ducts, equipment of all kinds are planned and built. When the call comes the telephone company is ready. So long as the nation continues to change and grow, the plotting of its future telephone needs will never grow dull. The opportunity is there! Music Professors Accept Invitation Maddy and Gordon Will Act as Judges at Kentucky Festival

Joseph E. Maddy of the school of music of the University of Michigan and E. B. Gordon of the music of the University of Wisconsin have accepted invitations from the publicity department of the university to be judges at the annual Kentucky high school music festival and contest. The contest will be held April 9 to 11. Dr. Hella Dean of the New York school of music has also been asked to assist in judging the contests but his acceptance has not yet been received. The Kentucky high school musical festival and contest has been a feature each spring at the university for several years. High school musicians are given special training and prizes in order that they may pit their ability against that of other singers and players of musical instruments in the state. The order of events will probably be that the contests will be held in the morning, making it necessary for several contests to be scheduled for the same time, and that the afternoons and evening will be reserved for concerts.

The dairymen's meeting will be in the Dairy building on Ross street. Each day there will be a general session and a special session for men and on Wednesday, a special session for bee-keepers.

Wildcats Await Second S. C. Game

Dart's football injury is rapidly mending and it will not be long until the former Ashland Hill Tomcat will appear on the hardwood court in a Wildcat uniform. A large crowd is expected out to see the struggle. The Volunteer team uses a system similar to that used by Kentucky last year and it will be a good opportunity for Lexington fans to see the faster Bupp system used against one they know so well.

Roamin' the Rialto with Thomas L. Riley

Here we are roaming again for the benefit of those yaps who read this stuff. At least enough of them read our selections before Christmas to make comments. One writes, "I don't think you were right in classing 'War Nurse' as a mistake of 1930." Must we go over all that again? Everybody is going this week over the air scenes in 'Hell's Angels' and we don't blame them. Of course, the remainder of the picture is rank but those scenes compensate. The bombing of the munition depot is one of the most thrilling things ever recorded on film. The dialogue, however, is the worst heard since the producer, under the efforts of the brothers Warner, you know the story of the millions that Howard Hughes, the producer, sunk into 'Hell's Angels' and that the picture was completed several times only to be scrapped and begun over again with a new cast. It should be seen, however, for those air and battle scenes.

President McVey Outlines Program

(Continued from Page One) to determine the needs in Kentucky schools. Instructors in the department of political science have worked in cooperation with the department of public health to determine the distribution, age and training of physicians in the state. The Agricultural College has proven to be of much help to the farmers of the state and are making plans to continue their work in an extensive study of forestry on the experiment station farm at Quicksand, Ky. President McVey also acknowledged the fine gift made by F. O. Robinson of Ft. Thomas who gave the university the mineral rights on the Quicksand Sub-station. This will enable the university to conduct the contemplated forestry experiments.

In closing his report it was noted that more than half of the students graduated have received degrees within the last ten years. President McVey expressed the opinion that their influence would be felt greatly within the next few years and that he continued their work in an earnest way through their work at the university.

Word comes from the west coast that the Guignol's former leading man, Leon Wiggleworth, has been cast in the juvenile lead of a picture titled 'Landrush' by the Fox studios. He is going under the name of David Worth. Here's predicting a title change. There's nothing sexy about 'Landrush.'

A picture promised long ago to Lexington is 'Min and Bill' which opens at the Ben All Sunday. The first in that theater caused its postponement. It was our pleasure to see this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product during the vacation and a second sitting is wanted by this mugg. Wallace Beery and Marie Dressler are co-starred in 'Min and Bill' and the supporting cast includes Dorothy Jordan and Marjorie Rambeau. You will like this picture as it contains a high comedy to make it entertaining and enough tragedy to make it appealing. This story is novel.

Lorna Moon's, 'The Dark Star' and tells of the love of an old wharf rat, enacted by Miss Dressler, for a girl left with her by an indiscreet mother. A peculiar love exists between Min and Bill, a sea dog, and the several scenes in which they demonstrate their mutual affection. Again we recommend 'Min and Bill.'

One of the better known mysteries, 'The Bat,' by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood, which has been played, even by tent shows, in every part of the nation. A silent picture was made of it several years ago and now the talking version of the stage hit, retitled, 'The Bat Whispers,' comes to the Kentucky tomorrow. Roland West directed this United Artists release and the cast is headed by Chester Morris. The leading woman is enacted by Una Merkel, from Covington, Ky., and the entire cast is well suited to the thrilling action of the footlights. We caught this flicker during vacation and enjoyed it. For genuine mystery with some excellent photography, capable acting, and effective direction, see 'The Bat Whispers.'

A change has taken place in the routine of the stage shows at the Ada Meade these days. They are presenting the footlights entertainment now in revue fashion with a master-of-ceremonies and everything, and not at all bad, at that. Like the rest of the customers, we go for that sister team.

And then there was the reader, who after seeing our All-American movie football team selections, asked, "Was that idea original with you?" James, my knotted stick!

ture version of Galsworthy's 'Escape' at the State Wednesday and Thursday. Made in England, the picture had many of the cruties usually found in production from those studios but was very strong dramatically. Beginning Sunday the State will shelter 'Madonna of the Streets,' a Columbia picture featuring Evelyn Brent. It is said to be an exciting melodrama.

ing roles. The presentation opens at the Strand Sunday. This could be called 'The Woman Who Came Back' as it is the first work of Janet Gaynor's since she left the Fox lot a few months ago. It seems that she only wanted to do the type of role she has in 'The Man Who Came Back' so she gave it to her. The picture tells of a woman's downfall through love of a man and you know the rest.
