Reality, fantasy blur in 'The Day Room'

"The Day Room," the latest per-formance by the UK Theatre De-partment, is not a play for which viewers can do all their thinking in advance.

The audience comes away confused. Who was what? Who was real, and who just pretended to be? Who was serious and responsible?

Don Derillo's play doesn't show life as a simple, artificial model where heroes' thinking and acting are always logical and clear, where the viewer knows from the very be-ginning how the story will end.

Derillo's play is about the real craziness inside us.

The first act takes place in a mental hospital room.

Two patients, Budge (Karl Anderson) and Wyatt (Ken Tonks) are waiting for a doctor's visit. The doctor and nurse come in and examine patients. Then, to the patients surprise, hospital orderlies come and drag away the "medical examiners," a group of mentally ill patients who had escaped from another wing of the hospital.

Budge and Wyatt are terrified. When the real doctor, Bazelon (Chris Arnold), finally arrives they complain to him about the episode. What happens next? The orderlies arrive to take away the "doctor" — another escaped patient.

Nurse Baker (Kara Grasso) who is in charge of this room, explains that these would-be doctors are seriously ill. They live in a special department called the "day room."

"They steal uniforms from the laundry and pretend they're us," nurse Baker says. "They stay in the day room, dressed up like all kinds of people."

Longtime Arno Klein theater groupies, Lynette (Melanie Julian) and Gary (Rusty Hamilton) have followed the performers from London to Cairo, but each time Lynette and Gary have been late. They've never have actually seen the actors perform.

However, this time the fans seem to be lucky. Armo Klein is in town, and several people from his troupe come to visit Lynette and Gary.

But they are strange; they don't look like actors. Freddie (Gregory Hines), a friend of Lynette and Gary, mentions that actress Jolene looks like a nurse from the mental hospital. (Both Jolene and nurse Baker are performed by Kara Grasso).

der who these people are

Has the legendary theater ever existed or have Lynette and Gary merely followed their dream? Is the motel room from the Act II actually the day room that we learned of in Act I?

Act the beginning, the two acts seem to have nothing in common expect the strange metaphor, the day room. Later the audience understands that both acts convey the same ideas.

Patients believe in their doctors, and they see them being dragged away as insane people. Fans believe in their idols and finally find that they are either only dreams or the people "from the other wing of the hospital."

The only problem is that this aprocach doesn't work all of the time. Moreover, it doesn't work at all. Idols fall sooner or later. All of us experience this disappointment in our lives.

Sooner or later we see our idols being dragged away by orderlies.

"The Day Room" is about our hidden desire to have authorities (idols) in our lives. It is about the power of the uniforms regardless of whom they belong to — doctors, orderlies or someone else.

The UK Theatre Department's decision to present Derillo's play was risky. The play is difficult even for a professional troupe. However, the result turned out nicely.

The play is well acted. Anderson, who played the roles of both Budge and Arno Klein, was great, although he is not even an acting major. major

Ken Tonks is excellent as Wyatt and the TV. (Yes, one of the heroes of Act II is the TV standing in the corner of the motel room — or maybe one of the inhabitants of the day room is pretending he is a TV.)
Tonks' hero is not very sophisticated. Rather, he is down to earth and full of energy.

Another reason for the success of "The Day Room" is the Laura Davis' excellent set design, which features her original sculptures. There is no stage; viewers sit on the floor, bringing a special intimacy to the performance.

hey are either only dreams or the coople "from the other wing of the tospital."

Its numerous failures shouldn't be tolerated; SGA must be dissolved

EDITORIAL

The problem

The impasse between the Student Government Association senate and President Pete November has passed. On Wednesday, November listed his executive order, which had prevented the senate from allocating its money. The SGA Supreme Court may hear the dispute, even though the issue at hand has been decided.

Nonetheless, the significance of November's action should not be overlooked. It is the last in an all-too-long string of impetuous actions that have made SGA the home to internal sagnabilities and ner-tions that have made SGA the home to internal squabbling and per-tions that have made SGA the home to internal squabbling and personal vendettas rather than the defense of students' rights.

For about three years, SGA has lost direction and been without purpose. Its officers have done little to advance the cause of the students they're supposed to represent.

In the way of budget cuts, funding for higher education and tuition increases, the organization has been impotent politically.

The same can be said for student services. Short of the student escort service (which is now run by the Air Force ROTC) and the campus telephone books, SGA has provided for some other essential services, but the dearth of leadership in SGA leaves them underdeveloped and underutilized.

Instead, money from student fees is used as the senate's bank to developed and underutilized.

Instead, money from student fees is used as the senate's bank to fund every Tom, Dick and Harriet wanting money to finance his or her narrowly focused project. And because of a student fee increase last year, the group's pockets are fatter than ever.

The fact that such a small percentage of the student body votes in SGA elections reveals most students believe they are disenfranchised, and rightly so because SGA does nothing for them.

Year after year, students have elected "new, fresh" representatives to correct the wrongs of the old ones, only to be disappointed. The jury is no longer out. The time has come for fundamental change; the verdict is guilty.

Because of all these failures, students should call for, and the senate should subsequently enact, SGA's dissolution. The responsibilities of SGA should be broken up and reassigned.

The organization's fee money should be given to the Student Activities Board and the Student Affairs division to provide the student services the existing SGA is feebly supporting.

In the place of SGA should be a student council charged solely with representing students' rights — in the political sense — within the University and with government organizations.

This 11-member council would be composed of the popularly elected president of the student body, who would lead the council and be the student representative on the UK Board of Trustees, and two elected representatives of each class (freshmen, sophomores, juniors, seniors, graduate students).

The group would act as a political action committee for students' rights and would be given $10,000 to carry out that mission.

UK students' money would be better spent this way: The people who know how to best provide services would be given more money—rather than having the Bank of Student Government.

In the place of the do-nothing, spend-everything senate, the student council would lead the cause of student activism. The council would provide the needed voice in University affairs that SGA has not in the past three years.

With a more precise mission, much of the infighting that has plagued SGA also could be eliminated.

For this to happen, students must demand a referendum asking these three questions: Is SGA doing anything for you?; Do you be-lieve SGA puts your student fees to good use?; and Should SGA be eliminated?

leve SGA puts your student rees to good user, and should SGA be eliminated?

What you can do

Sign your name to the ballot below and get your friends to do the same. Mail it, free of charge in campus mail, to the Kentucky Kernel office (26 Grehan Journalism Building, 40506-0042), or drop it off during business hours.

One thousand signatures are needed to get the referendum. The signatures will be delivered to SGA at the end of this week, forcing the referendum.

If you believe, as we do, that student government is ineffective and should be disbanded, we're offering to provide the vehicle for you to have it your way. It's up to you.

If you're tired of a student government that's more concerned about petty political infighting than defending your rights, this is your chance to do something about it.

Clip the petition and mail it in. A more efficient system of student Clip the petition and mail it in. A more efficient system of student epresentation and service awaits.

As students at UK, we, the undersigned, request a referendum on the following questions:

-Is the Student Government Association doing anything for •Do you believe SGA puts your student fees to good use?
•Should SGA be dissolved?

Some professors make life unbearable

I must admit that I have found most of my professors at UK to be quite helpful. They are, for the most part, very knowledgeable and are able to teach students with great proficiency.

But there are exceptions.
I must admit that there have been a few professors who made the classroom experience less than enjoyable, sometimes frightful.
How about the professors that are so on top of their subjects that they assume you are incapable of making an intelligent comment in class. To them, you are a helpless idiot; it is inconceivable that you may have an insight they have not thought of.
What about the math professors with their's account and slowny hand.

writing. Calculus is hard enough, but, without a good professor to help guide you, it can be almost impossible.

nelp guide you, it can be almost impossible.

Once I had a professor that did nothing in class but tell funny stories and talk about his last trip to Europe. This seemed terrific for the first five weeks of the semester, but when the mid-term exam contained questions about the things we were supposed to have covered in class, I was less than happy. Ever get your first paper back and find that your professor is an exceptionally hard grader? You better hope that the deadline for dropping a class has not passed. If it has, you may be in for a long semester.

The point is, a particular profess.

students in one section of art history may find that the class is a breeze, while students in another think that the class is impossible. The difference? The teacher. Given the important role professors play in the learning process, it seems strange to me that few students take time to get acquainted with potential professors before registration. To most, the professor listed in the schedule book is nothing more than a name without a face.

face. Several years ago, SGA conducted independent surveys regarding professors and their teaching styles. These surveys attempted to capture the general attitudes of students toward specific professors and to make that information available to students.

This allowed for a more inable to students.

This allowed for a more informed selection of classes and, in many cases, allowed students to avoid professors that had been unpopular in the past.

Unfortunately, this service is no longer available. Instead of spending student money in support of politically active groups like UK Right to Life or Students Against

There is no need for SGA to conduct independent surveys. The University currently conducts similar surveys of every class. The information gathered is used by the individual professors to evaluate their own performances, as well as by the University for merit evaluations.

SGA could cut down on the ex-pense of the program simply by obtaining the information from these surveys and publishing it for students.

Even with these statistics Even with these statistics, stu-dents are likely to get a few profes-sors that they will hate. Neverthe-less, informed choices of classes during registration will minimize the risk of aggravation and frustra-tion later in the semester.

SAB diversifies campus by funding speakers

The Alex P. Keaton wannabe never ceases to amaze me. I have bitten my tongue several times this year in regard to many of Editorial Editor Joe Brann's slity, often mistaguided, editorials, but I find I must respond to his Feb. 23 column 'Organizations abuse student money,' First of all, I would like to commend the Student Activities Board multicultural committee for bringing those who enlighten and educate, like Amiri Baraka, to the UK campus.

caie, like Amiri Bariaka, to the UK campus.

Did Braun attend the poetry reading, or did the simply go on the opinions of someone else, a second hand source? If he did, then shame on him. As a journalist, he should know that if he wants the facts he must go to the main source. Hearsay alone is simply not good enough. I cannot say for sure whether he attended the readings, but if he did not, then perhaps that should have been his first step. I know there was a Kentucky Kermel representative there, but since he is the one writing the column, he should have attend-

If he did attend, which I doubt

If he did attend, which I doubt, perhaps he would have heard that the poems Baraka presented had nothing to do with killing Europeans or raping European women. His poems focused on Africans and our struggles and our need to be educated about our history and the need to take action. If there was something that offended Braun, then Braun's job as a journalist was to ask questions, to ask Baraka what he mean.

to ask questions, to ask Baraka what he meant. Braun even could have ques-tioned Baraka about the other in-formation he received. Or he could have gone to the multicultural comthey felt the need to invite someone like Baraka to UK. In other words, Braun should do his job before critest groups.

Maybe he wanted to put fear into snayoe ne wanteu to put rear mito every European on this campus, so that people like Baraka, who shake the system and question its very foundations, will not be brought to UK. Perhaps he would rather invite "can't we all just get along" types. The University's purpose is to educate. This education does not always have to come from the class-education.

Baraka came to this campus to do a little teaching — not on how to kill Europeans, but on how Africans need to wake up and take charge of their own destines.

I do not have a need for engineering, but I do not suggest that the entire program be eliminated simply because it is of no interest to me.

SAB and SGA must work for all

SAB and SGA must work for all SAB and SGA must work for all students. Both organizations must allocate their resources is such ways that all students 'needs are met. Even conservative, right-wing students who hide under the wing of our student newspaper.

SGA not obligated to fund UK Right to Life

This is in response to Staff Artist Tricia Barry's column asserting that the Student Government Associa-tion is obligated to fund UK Right To Life.

In the column, she argues that be-cause SGA has funded other spe-cialty organizations, UK National Organization of Women in particu-lar, SGA should fund Right To Life as well.

as well.

I do not agree at all, Barry does not bother to point out why UK NOW received funds from SGA, the first place. Last Wednesday, I spoke with Carol Dixon, one of UK NOW's co-directors. She explained to me that the monies had been appropriated to start the Cheryl Clark Buddy System.

The purpose of the program is to Buddy System.

The purpose of the program is to to help people on this campus who have experienced sexual harasment. The buddy system points people to the appropriate channels to deal with harassment — helping victims write letters, find counseling and so forth.

Amanda Sexton

The Cheryl Clark Buddy System, essence, is a clearing house of in-ormation and a support system for ctims of sexual harassment. The rogram is named for an acquain-mee of Dixon's.

As far as I'm concerned, this is a project worthy of funds from SGA, and Dixon deserves much praise for on District the state of the st fund raising and is not locally or na-tionally affiliated with organiza-tions that might help fund operating Moreover, those of us who are pro-choice are not the only ones opposed to the funding requested by UK Right To Life. After last Wednesday's meeting, I spoke with several senators about about the Right To Life request for funds. One of the senators said he is prolife and thinks the group needed to be on campus.

And while he was initially in favor of the proposal, he began to change his mind after talking to several people. He thought, as I do, that Right to Life should be able to pay for the advertisements itself and that it is unfair to expect an entire student body to fund a group that makes no use of the many po-

I would remind Barry that there are legitimate reasons for rejecting funding requests such as those made by UK Right to Life. Also, I made by UK Right to Life. Also, I suggest that Barry not cloud the issue by presenting an "us-against-them" situation. The speech of one SGA member is not indicative that the world is out to get UK Right to Life.

And finally, no one is "pro-abortion." NOW is pro-choice, meaning that they support a wom-an's right to decide what alterna-tive she will choose.

"Pro-abortion" implies coercion of women to have abortions, and I have never seen or heard evidence that Planned Parenthood, NOW or any other abortion-rights advocates coerce women to abort against their will.

Fashion show set for today at noon

By Amy Barnes Staff Writer

Student Center Food Services

Student Center Food Services will sponsor a spring fashion show today at noon in the Student Center cafeteria. The show was coordinated by Images Modeling Agency owner Janie Head with the assistance of Food Service Director Betsy Mahoney and UK marketing intern Laura Collins. UK students will model business suits, formal gowns and spring fashions from Fayette Mall stores. "We're trying to increase awareness of healthy eating and and encourage students to take pride in their appearance," Mahoney said, "We thought a fashion show would be a fun way to do it."

UK already offers a variety of food choices for health-conscious students.

For breakfast, there are bagels and orange juice available in the coffee shop. For lunch and dinner, students may choose from salads, yogurt, a baked potato, grilled chicken sandwiches or fruit, along with Healthy Choice meats and fat-free dressings. In addition, all of frozen yo-

Bates proposed that the goals his administration would begin could be carried on by succeeding admin-istrations. He said this would add stability to SGA and give the stu-dents an idea of what SGA is doing and planning.

Advising center will replace ASSA office

With University budget cuts and restructuring on almost every level, many find themselves asking, "What next?"

One thing is certain, though. The Academic Support Services for Adults office will be replaced with a Universitywide undergraduate ad-

"Last year we saw 1,283 different students," said Ken Freedman, an adviser in the ASSA office. "Our concern is that the advising center will have to be big enough to serve all these people in addition to the ones it is designed to serve."

the advising center, explained the center's mission as "giving advis-ing assistance in the best form of the word."

This includes more than just schedule building, she said. "The center will assist all undeclared students on this campus in addition to giving assistance to transfer and non-degree students."

As with any change, certain features of the ASSA program will be curtailed. The specific reductions in services haven't been decided. "We probably are going to have to curtail some of the programs that have been available to norraditional students," Hoskins said. Victoria Gough, 32, a psychology junior, said she has benefited from the ASSA's current structure. "I took the refresher algebra class, and I hope to take the begin-ning chemistry class if it will still be available," she said.

available," she said.
Efforts are being made to offer as many refresher courses as possible.
"We're trying to decide which things are most vital that non-traditional students need and which of those fall into the scope of an advising center," Hoskins said. "Those things have yet to be ironed out."

Some aspects of the new advising center are certain. There will be a place for students to go with many of their questions, from 'How do I file a repeat option?' to 'Which

"All the students at this universi-ty, including undeclared students, will henceforward have their advis-ing needs met in ways that were not possible to do before," Hoskins said. "This center is going to be 'user friendly.'" 'user friendly.

The entire ASSA staff, in addition to various other personnel, will be moved to the advising center, Freedman said.

"It has been comforting for them to know that there is an office designed for non-traditional students," Freedman said. "We feel like we have been doing something worthwhile."

"We have a really nice art and photography section," Baxter said.

"A lot of people still avoid us be-cause they think we're some sort of weirdo head shop, and we're not," Francis said. "We try to carry a lot of different and familiar things.

"We really would like to pull in more University people, not just students but some of the instructors students but some of the instructors as well. We're open to any suggestions anybody has. If there's something they're looking for, we'll try to get it for them," he said. "We'd really like to expand on some of our foreign things."

Bates outlined several long-term goals for SGA. He suggested a de-ferred payment plan, for students to pay monthly installments on tui-tion, room and board, instead of a lump sum at the beginning of the semester.

He also suggested a student lob-by effort during meetings of the Kentucky General Assembly so students have more influence on is-sues involving higher education, such as tuition increases.
