Professor, 3 others put in hall of fame

By THOMAS J. SULLIVAN
Staff Writer

Former CBS News reporter David Dick, a professor in the UK journalism department, is one of four 1987 inductees into the Kentucky Journalism Hall of Fame.

Hugh Haynie, editorial cartoonist for The Courier-Journal for 29 years; Fred J. Burkhard, former editor and publisher of the Casey County News and the late Alan M. Trout, Frankfort correspondent and columnist for the (Louisville) Courier-Journal for 39 years, were also inducted.

Dick says he feels honored to be among such distinguished company. "I met Hugh (Haynie) when I worked at WHAS, and I've admired him for a long time," Dick said.

And when it comes to the late Alan Trout, Dick is especially honored. "I have a special place in my heart for Trout, whom I've never met," he said. "I read his column for a long time, he just had a feel for Kentucky people."

Dick's admiration for Trout has even led him to make Trout the subject of a piece of poetry.

The poem discusses how "Alan Trout used to wonder a lot about the idiosyncrasy on the highway to warn people about falling rocks," Dick said.

Trout couldn't understand why signs on the highway warned "falling rocks" or "falling rocks" for that matter, Dick said. If they were fallen rocks then why didn't they just remove them from the road, and if they were falling then they'd have to rush out there with the sign immediately as it was happening.

UK receives $1 million to examine cholesterol

By EVAN SILVERSTEIN
Staff Writer

A program headed by five UK Medical Center researchers received $959,000 yesterday to help assist in the search for ways of lowering the incidence of cardiovascular disease.

Cardiovascular disease is responsible for nearly one million American deaths each year.

"We saw this as a big opportunity to lower the risks for heart disease," said Dr. James Anderson, program coordinator, at a news conference.

The National Institute of Health presented the grant to be used to fund a two-phase project called the UK Cholesterol and Cardiovascular Risk Reduction Program, said Gail Hairston, a communication specialist for the office of public affairs.

The first phase, a public awareness program, will educate the public on the relationship between high blood cholesterol levels and cardiovascular disease.

During the next six months, the program will offer free screenings to measure blood pressure and cholesterol levels.

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, fat and cholesterol circulate in the blood and deposited in the inner walls of the arteries. Over a period of years, scar tissues and debris collect as a continuous flow of cholesterol and fat build up.

This buildup causes a continuous narrowing of the arteries. This process, called atherosclerosis, results in heart attack when one or more of the arteries become critically narrowed and a blood clot forms at the site of narrowing.

During the first phase of the project, screening of blood pressure and cholesterol levels will be offered for people between the ages of 30 and 50. Those interested in this free screening should call 257-4659 to make an appointment.

The second phase of the UK Cholesterol and Cardiovascular Risk Reduction Program will involve four clinical research projects, Hairston said.

Appalachian students perform favorably at UK, report says

By DAN HASSELT
Senior Staff Writer

Appalachian students perform as well if not better in college than other students, according to a report from the UK Appalachian Center.

However, the report says myths that Appalachian students are "generally unsuited and ill-prepared for academic work" still exist, indicating a need to destroy stereotypes.

The report also says UK should work to change its image, which to many people in the mountains is that of a "large, impersonal" and "indifferent" place.

The report was initially prepared for the center and UK administrators but will be used on a larger basis because "we were in fact surprised with what we found," said Ron Eller, the center's director.

These findings "should lay to rest a lot of myths that exist about Appalachian students today, especially Appalachian students at UK," Eller said.

The report said "there is little difference in performance between eastern Kentucky students at UK and those from other regions."

A study of ACT scores, classroom performance and retention rates showed that differences between Appalachian and other students are "insignificant or non-existent."

During the 1985-86 school year, there were 3,116 Appalachian students at UK, comprising 18 percent of the University's student population. The percentage in upper division programs was a "significant" 29 percent.

"The student population at UK is in great degree an elite population of Appalachian students," Weller said.

However, the report says a disproportionate number of these students come from a limited number of Appalachian counties — those that adjoin the Bluegrass region, those coal-producing counties near the Virginia line and those that include the area's largest towns.

Research shows an inadequacy of UK recruiting in eastern Kentucky that often leaves some high schools in the poorer areas unvisited. This both contributes to and is caused by "the perception of UK as a cold and indifferent institution," the report says.

The report stresses the need for UK "to develop the leadership potential necessary to improve the quality of life in the state... including areas like Appalachia." The program would concentrate on keeping talented graduates within the state and within the Appalachian area.

Powell forced to help with murders by lesbian lover Foster, lawyer says

Associated Press

Tina Hickey Powell joined in a killing spree that resulted in the deaths of five people because she was afraid of LaFonda Fay Foster, her lesbian lover, Powell's attorney said yesterday.

"Tina panicked when Fay started shooting the people," said Gene Lewter, as he began presenting evidence he hopes will save Powell from being sentenced to death. "Fay gave her the knife and said, 'Here, stab them.'"

Out of fear, Powell obeyed, Lewter said. "Just like a wife who is the victim of abuse and learns to know when the violence is going to come, Tina knows now to mess with Fay sometimes," said Lewter, who said Tina played the role of a battered wife in the women's lesbian relationship.

Lewter said Powell's ability to make a decision on the night of the slayings also was hampered by the alcohol and drugs she had used.

Lewter said evidence he will present, including testimony from Powell, will show Foster had beaten his client several times and considered killing her on April 23, 1986, the night the five Lexington residents died.

The eight-woman, four-man jury that convicted both Foster, 23, and Powell, 28, of five counts of murder last week now is hearing evidence on how they should be punished for their crimes in what is known as the sentencing phase of the trial.

If the jury does not sentence the women to death, as the prosecution has requested, they could sentence them to a fixed term of 20 years to life in prison, or to life without the possibility of parole for 25 years.

The victims — Carlos Kearns, 71; his wife, Virginia, 45; Trudy Harrell, 59; Theodore Sweet, 53; and Roger Keene — were shot, stabbed and run over by a car. Two of the men also were burned.

Testimony for Foster in the sentencing phase ended yesterday, after her attorneys played a videotaped interview of Foster for the jury.

On the tape, Foster said she felt sorry for the five people who died. She was answering questions posed by Lane Veilkamp, a psychiatrist who is an expert in child abuse and who evaluated Foster's childhood for the trial.

"If it hadn't been them it would have probably been someone else — myself," Foster said on the tape. "I was hurt about my failures and I took it out on those people. I can't give you a reason why it happened."

UK group to recruit minorities

By JAMES HOUNCHELL
Staff Writer

UK is attempting to get more black students interested in higher education by initiating a two-year program designed to familiarize them with college life, according to an article in the Lexington Herald-Leader yesterday.

Victor Gaines, executive director of minority resource development at the University, said 60 black area junior high school students will attend classes lasting a half a day each Saturday beginning March 21 through June 1.

During June, the sessions will be each weekday and the students will be taken on field trips as well, Gaines said.

Gaines said the program has a dual purpose concerning the students involved. "The main purpose is to encourage minority youth to seek post-secondary education. A second motive is to get them interested in UK," he said.

SDX panel discusses information

By WILL RENSHAW
Staff Writer

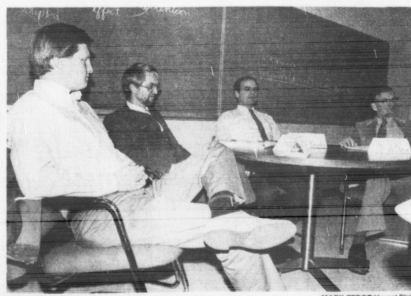

The Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi, sponsored a meeting last night in 225 Journalism Building commemorating the birthday of first amendment author, James Madison.

Sigma Delta Chi has recently recognized James Madison as a major contributor to the establishment of the first amendment by naming March 16 Freedom of Information Day. In honor of this date SDX titled its question/answer session the "Freedom of Information Panel."

The panel consisted of four people selected for their variance in the fields of journalism and law. Included were Ray Moore, visiting professor of journalism; Brad Canon, professor of political science; John Rogers, professor of Law, and Kit Wager, a reporter for the Lexington Herald-Leader.

The opening points of the meeting exposed the difference between the freedom of the press, voiced in the Constitution, and the Freedom of Information Act.

"Freedom of the press gives us

Kit Wager (left), Roy Moore, John Rogers and Bradley Canon participate in a freedom of information panel discussion last night.

the power to say what we want to say," Rodgers said. "The FOI Act provides that government agencies have to give out information."

"The name FOI is really a misnomer. It should be called the Disclosure of Documents Act," Rodgers said.

Rodgers continued by stating that the FOI and freedom of the press are two very different things, at which point Wager disagreed saying that the two went "hand in hand."

"You can't have one without the other," Wager said. Moore interjected that the FOI

"wasn't designed to carry out duties of the first amendment because the FOI only covers fifty major (government) agencies."

The debate then moved to the problems encountered in the FOI, basically consisting of a possible lack of public awareness and the red tape surrounding its use.

"The real problem is that they (the public) don't know where to gather information," Moore said. "The public needs to know what's available."

New beach games offer alternatives to drinking

By ANNETTE POOLE
Contributing Writer

The newest form of entertainment to hit the beaches for the thousands of college students venturing to Florida for spring break promises fun and excitement for all.

The popular "hot spots" are the beaches. Many UK students are seeking warmth and sun at Fort Lauderdale, Daytona, Miami and Fort Meyers beaches. This spring break season most of these beaches are sponsoring a new form of recreation — "beach games."

In Fort Lauderdale, the tourism and business community organized a special task force to ensure the safety of the college students. This group of 28 businesses and hoteliers developed the idea of collegiate games to offer alternatives to those under the legal drinking age of 21.

The college games are based on intercollegiate competition, similar to the intramural program at UK. The competing students are to be held everyday on the Fort Lauderdale Beach. The featured game this year is "Beach Blanket Bingo." It is played on a blanket board using people as chips. Other featured events include basketball, inflatable hydro-plane races, volleyball, tug-of-war, aerobics and dance contests.

The Daytona Beach Chamber of Commerce is keeping the college students entertained during their

UK receives grant for computer program

By ANNETTE POOLE
Contributing Writer

The Research Foundation at UK has received a grant from the U.S. Department of Education for $111,375 to develop a computer assisted instruction program on the use of microcomputers in special education.

The "primary funding" will be for the staff, said Edward Blackhurst, project director at UK. There will be a total of five people that will be working on the project.

"We will be developing eight computer assisted instruction lessons on the topic of how to use the micro-computer in special education," Blackhurst said. "The programs will be designed to be used in special education — teacher education programs."

Blackhurst said microcomputers are used in a variety of different ways to teach handicapped children. One example of their use is in "drill and practice" games that enable handicapped students to practice skills they already know. Microcomputers can also be used as tools for handicapped children.

"If a handicapped child has poor handwriting, and many do, they can use a word processor to avoid the problem. They can also be used with blind children because they can be programmed with speech synthesizers," he said.

The project has a budget period of 36 months beginning this July.

"On June 30, 1988, Phase I of the project will have been completed and at that time it will be considered whether to continue the project," said Pamela Pearlman, press secretary for Rep. Larry Hopkins.

"The project has been approved for three years on a continuation proposal," Blackhurst said. "In the first year, we will design four programs, the second year we will field test the first programs and finish the last four, the third year we will do revisions based on the field tests."

If progress is made the funding will be continued after the first year. These programs will be used at colleges and universities around the United States, Blackhurst said.

House votes for freeze on aid to contras

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted yesterday to freeze $40 million in aid for the Nicaragua contras for six months and to order the Reagan administration to use the time to account for millions of dollars in allegedly missing previous aid.

The 230-to-196 vote marked the first in a series of expected congressional battles over contra aid this year. The resolution was supported by 213 Democrats and 17 Republicans and opposed by 156 Republicans and 40 Democrats.

Democrats said yesterday's action was justified by alleged corruption in the ranks of Nicaragua's anti-leftist insurgents. But Republicans said the vote was a bid to break a promise made by Congress last year and could "hand Central America over to the Soviet Union."

The House vote, heralded in advance by Democratic leaders as a signal that congressional support for the contra program is at an end, sends the issue to the Senate.

A Senate vote is expected next week on a resolution disapproving the $40 million outright.

Final congressional action to block the money would draw a certain veto from President Reagan, and leaders of both parties say such a veto would stand up.

But House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas made clear that the real target is not the $40 million — the last installment of a $100 million aid package voted last year — but the $105 million Reagan has requested for the contras for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

"I think the exercise is very useful... in awakening the administration to the reality that they must focus on other ways to find peace and secure our interests in Central America," Wright said yesterday.

As the debate began, Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., leader of the House Democratic task force on contra aid, said a moratorium was essential because of the money previously provided the contras, "tens of millions and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars cannot be accounted for."

But contra aid supporters said the moratorium proposal was aimed at embarrassing Reagan and giving the Soviet Union a victory on the mainland of the Western Hemisphere.

"I do not want to be recorded as contributing to handing Central America over to the Soviets," said Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., sounding a theme repeated by many Republican speakers.

Many Republicans acknowledge that the disclosures of the Iran-contra affair have soured the atmosphere in Congress and eroded support for contra aid.

Five activists convicted for defying government

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — A judge yesterday convicted five leaders of the Jazz Section, a cultural group that promoted jazz and other non-sanctioned art forms.

Two defendants were sentenced to prison terms of 10 months and 16 months, while the other three were given suspended sentences.

About 150 supporters outside the courtroom sang "Give Peace a Chance." Their rhythmic clapping could be heard throughout the court proceedings.

Some spectators tried to prevent plainclothes agents from filming them but were pushed away by a man in a raincoat. One handcuffed defendant shouted "Long Live Jazz" before he was led away.

Authorities have denied the trial has political connotations, but Western human rights activists say it is the largest political trial in Czechoslovakia since the Communist state tried human rights activists in 1979.

The five defendants are leaders of Jazz Section, an independent publishing and musical organization founded in 1971 as part of the official Musician's Union.

The group fell into disfavor with the government for publishing unauthorized art and arranging jazz and other concerts without state sanction. In 1984, the state banned the group's parent organization, the Musician's Union.

Authorities charged that the defendants engaged in illegal economic activities because they continued to run the 7,000-member Jazz Section even though it officially ceased to exist after 1984 — during which they made illegal profits of $6,200.

Students have chance for free study in France

Staff reports

Students have until April 1 to apply for two full-tuition scholarships to study in France.

One of the scholarships will give a UK student the opportunity to study at the University of Caen, said Isabella Zsoldos, adviser for the Study Abroad Programs in UK's international affairs office. The scholarship includes a student's lodging, she said.

The other scholarship offered will give a UK student the chance to teach at nursery and elementary schools in Deauville, France, Zsoldos said.

The teaching scholarship includes tuition, lodging and partial meals, she said.

To apply, students must fill out an application, submit a letter between two and four pages long expressing why they're interested in studying abroad and three recommendations along with all college transcripts.

Students must be in their third year of college-level French or its equivalent to qualify. Students who apply for the scholarship should have taken French 312, Zsoldos said.

The teaching scholarship is open to all UK students with a minimum of two years of college-level French or its equivalent. French 203 is strongly recommended for the scholarship, she said.

Applications are available in 102 Bradley Hall.

spring break. Each week is filled with concerts and other special events that cater to college students, said Debi Yates of the Chamber of Commerce. Some events include concerts, comedy shows and sports competitions.

"For the past several years, we have been trying to provide some good clean fun for the college students," Yates said. "And so far it has been a big hit for Daytona."

The most publicized event is the Second Annual National Collegiate Sports Festival. It is open to any college student with at least nine credit hours.

There are team sports as well as individual sports. "Laser Tag is being played this year for the first time on any beach," said Michael Orlando of the National Collegiate Sports Foundation, the sponsor of the event.

This type of tag is played with a laser tag gun and if the opponent is hit on the receiver pad, the game is over.

College teams, such as Ohio State, Slippery Rock, Michigan State and Georgia State, will compete for the titles in flag football, basketball, softball, soccer, "ultimate frisbee," volleyball and rugby. Individuals may compete in golf, tennis, swimming, a five-kilometer run, cycling and a fitness course.

"Additional points will be awarded to anyone who donates a pint of blood to the American Red Cross booth set up at the game sites," said Orlando. "It is one of the positive aspects of the competion. The kids do get hurt and the extra blood is always needed."

"The games were developed last year as an alternative to the "normal" spring break activities like drinking, drugs and the new sport — balcony jumping," Orlando said.

Last year participants came from all over the United States. Over 60 colleges participated. "We had a good turnout last year, but this year it is even better," Orlando said.

The winners from each week of competition will be flown back in September to compete for the national championship. The "Four Finals" are possible due to a $30,000 grant from the Florida Sunshine State Games.

Penrod's in Miami Beach is the location of collegiate games. They are under the coordination of TRENZD U.S.A., the in-house marketing firm for Penrod's. The games will be on Miami Beach, and will run from 10 a.m. to dark Monday through Friday.

All college students are urged to sign up in advance to compete against other colleges for the championship in April. The winning teams will be flown back to compete in the finals.

Fort Meyers Beach does not offer any organized games. Chamber of Commerce Vice President, D.J. Petrucci, said the college kids can design their own kind of fun on the seven-mile strip of beach. We don't have the kinds of problems the other beaches do."

'Dreamgirls' to bring 60s back to future

By JEREMY N. HOWELL
Contributing Writer

The Broadway rock opera hit "Dreamgirls," six times a Tony Award winner and recipient of two Grammys, is coming to Lexington tonight.

Complete with its 42nd Street cast and production directors, "Dreamgirls" will be performed at the Opera House through Saturday.

Taken from the book and lyrics by Tom Lyren and first performed on Broadway in 1982, "Dreamgirls" is a personalized history of the black music movement of the 60s — the rise of Motown and the crossover of rhythm & blues into the white rock charts.

In a two-act soul opera, an all black trio, the Dreams climb the ladder to success. Their aspirations are compromised throughout by increasing tension within the group and with their inevitable entourage of managers, lovers and star makers. Once at the pinnacle of their endeavors, the Dreams discover the consequences of success, replete in their sordidity and anti-climax.

Intervened into this turbulent plot, in the form of medleys and musical dialogue, are 30 numbers.

"If you like music, or ever just hummed a tune from the 60s, you're going to be enthralled by 'Dreamgirls,'" says Dick Pardy, executive director of the Broadway Live at the Opera House series. "Dreamgirls is slick, sassy, first-rate entertainment."

According to Pardy, the production of the opera is a "tidal wave of staging." Uniquely, he said, there is no overture at the beginning and the opera explodes into "the most powerful first act I've ever experienced."

Pardy draws attention to a favorable comparison between "Dreamgirls" and Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Cats" when both were performed in Louisville last week: "Dreamgirls" is a hit, and all hits are unique. Andrew Lloyd Webber is

"Dreamgirls," which opens tonight at the Opera House, is a rag-to-riches story that starts a dance trio, the Dreams, climbing to the top of their field where they find disillusionment.

just another composer, scrabbling about for new music and effects."

Pardy points to the wealth of genius among the technical directors in the company. He is astounded by their sense of cohesion despite their keen professional rivalry that is apt to ruin a production.

Robin Wagner, set designer and Tharon Musser, lighting designer are both multi-awarded figures who have worked on over twenty Broadway productions including "42nd Street" and "Chorus Line" and create what he terms a "visual explosion."

Theoni Aldredge, who designed more than 300 costumes for the cast, ranging from simple street clothes to the most extravagant feathered attire, also contributes to a group of directors which Pardy estimates as "the finest industry has to offer in the world today."

The cast, too, is world-renowned. It has toured Japan, and after its current tour of the United States and Canada, will continue onto Paris and, maybe, London.

Pardy stresses that the production of "Dreamgirls" at the Lexington Opera House, sponsored by Coca Cola Bottling Mideast, is a non-profit community service venture. Despite their high price, tickets are being sold at cost-price. He asks for a strong turnout from students and the public so as to break even.

"Dreamgirls" will open tonight at 8 and will continue tomorrow at 8 p.m. and Saturday at 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $45. Tickets can be charged at 233-3535. Students can get tickets at 50 percent off 90 minutes before each performance.

Famed monster hits UK in 'Godzilla vs. Crack'

ERIK REECE
Arts Editor

According to its creator, Tom Thurmond, "Godzilla vs. Crack" is a parody contrasting the dark crime drama of the 40s and 50s with a spoof of the modern drug scene.

The 30-minute film will open (and close) tonight at 8:30 in 118 Classroom Building.

Thurmond, who was recently accepted into the Rhode Island School of Design where he will study film, said the objective of making "Godzilla vs. Crack" is to have fun. "I've never made a full-length video before."

"The frame is provided through the eyes of a detective who had to trace Godzilla down in Lexington," Thurmond said.

While on his rampage of Lexington, the famed monster makes its way to the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority house where it terrorizes unsuspecting sorority girls. Unfortunately, he "subsequently develops a serious chemical abuse problem," Thurmond said.

In a bastardization of something Hemingway once said, all Godzilla stories end in death. This is a Godzilla story.

What was the motivation behind "Godzilla vs. Crack?" "I wanted to teach myself how to make a movie on a low-budget scale," Thurmond said. "It's basically a whole lot of fun — nothing more, nothing less."

The film (and I use that word loosely) cost Thurmond $400 to make. For special effects, he used a 6 foot tall inflatable Godzilla.

While "Godzilla vs. Crack" has obvious potential to attract quite a cult following, opinion is still somewhat divided concerning the film's merits.

Kentucky writer, Gurney Norman calls it "a searing portrait of late 80s American consciousness." However, head UK basketball coach, Eddie Sutton doesn't share Norman's enthusiasm. In the film's liner notes, he terms it a "relentless examination of the pathetic limitations of video art."

"Godzilla vs. Crack" is being presented by the English department, though it would probably be hard to pin down anyone as directly responsible for it.

I also believe the makers of "Godzilla vs. Crack" reserve the right to fabricate any quotes which may appear concerning the film.

20,000 forgotten manuscripts by noted musicians are found

NEW YORK (AP) — "S wonderful, marvelous" — is a windfall of long-forgotten tunes by George Gershwin, Jerome Kern, Richard Rodgers and others, discovered in a dusty warehouse and now revealed to musical scholars.

Among 20,000 new-found treasures being studied are Kern's hand-written copies of "Ol' Man River" and "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man" and 90 hand-written Gershwin manuscripts.

"Manuscripts turn up from time to time, but this was surprising, considering the magnitude and importance of this find," said music historian Robert Kimball, who is editing the National Institute for Music Theater's "Catalogue of the American Musical."

"It's like finding a Stephen Foster song, or a Walt Whitman poem," said Kimball, who led the treasure hunters who examined the contents of 80 cartons found five years ago in a Warner Brothers warehouse in Secaucus, N.J.

University Senate's support of proposal noted, appreciated

A little more than a month ago, the University Senate overwhelmingly voted down a resolution that would have prevented instructors from requiring UK students to attend class.

For all intents and purposes, it appeared that the faculty senators were more concerned with being "stripped" of their rights than with enhancing the learning process by making their subject material interesting enough to entice students into the classroom.

On Monday, the University Senate demonstrated that it is something more than a group of self-centered faculty members only concerned with preserving its own rights.

Monday's unofficial show of support for Student Government Association Senator Cyndi Weaver's proposal for two "dead days" before finals week proved that idea incorrect.

Although it will be some time before the policy could become reality, it is both important and pleasing to note the senate, which is composed mostly of faculty, is willing to work with students on a proposal that will benefit students.

Senate Council Chairman Wilbur Frye should be commended for his interest in the proposal and his efforts to slow down the decision-making process in order to work out its potential problems.

Frye recognizes the campuswide impacts this proposal would have on the University. He also recognizes input must be solicited from those who will most likely be affected by such a proposal.

Most importantly, however, Frye recognized the difficulty of persuading the University Senate to approve a policy that has not been adequately prepared and researched.

NANCY! IT'S HOWARD BAKER ON THE PHONE ABOUT RECOUPING MY IMAGE AS A STRONG LEADER.

WHAT DO YOU THINK I SHOULD TELL HIM?

Brennan's Point of View

As a result, when the Senate Council initially considered Weaver's proposal, it postponed making any decision and sending it to the senate until a committee was formed to study the feasibility of adding two "dead days" to the semester.

Noting historical precedent and anticipating an adverse reaction from faculty, Frye decided to take the proposal to the senate prematurely to test the opposition before appointing a committee.

Frye, as well as the senate, could have easily ruled the proposal as unfeasible and dismissed it.

They didn't, and it is reassuring to know that student concerns have not entirely eluded the University Senate and Senate Council.

UK should respect influence of King, not just black athletes

"Freedom has always been an expensive thing." — Martin Luther King Jr.

It's hard to describe the feeling I get whenever I read or hear a quote by Martin Luther King Jr. He is, in my opinion, the most powerful and influential speaker this world has ever known. I envy every person who has been fortunate enough to hear him speak in person. There will never be anyone like him again.

As many of you are aware, Jan. 19 was the birthday of this great man. For the most part it was a day of hope, as people all over the country came together not as blacks and whites, but as human beings. Right here in Lexington approximately 2,000 human beings braved the cold and the rain as they marched around campus in commemoration of King's birthday.

Unfortunately, as many of you are aware, feelings of respect and admiration toward what Martin Luther King Jr. stood for were not shared by all. In Forsythe County, Ga., the appearance of the Ku Klux Klan and numerous other idiots waving confederate flags, throwing rocks, etc., served as a reminder that prejudice and discrimination are still alive and well here in the "land of the free."

My initial reaction was to go out and burn every rebel flag I could possibly find. Or maybe even tie a racist to the back of my truck and drive around campus for awhile. But while I was looking for some rope it occurred to me that the only thing these actions could accomplish would be the lowering of myself to their despicable level. But who knows... maybe next year.

I was sitting in class on Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday with these thoughts running through my head when a friend of mine sat down next to me and started talking about the UK-LSU game. As if the thought of Forsythe County wasn't depressing enough, thinking about the massacre which took place the day before in Rupp Arena made me want to leave class and go get heavily sedated.

But that's when I stopped and asked myself, "What the hell am I and everyone else doing here anyway? After all, today is Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday." And it was at that moment it dawned on me how incredibly ironic it is that UK doesn't put aside Jan. 19 in order to honor King, yet it practically lives and dies with the performance of a basketball team dominated by blacks.

College basketball is definitely a big business these days with nice profits in store for schools in the position to put quality teams on the court. And it's of course no secret that UK is among the schools that consistently produce quality basketball teams year after year. Although the exact amount of money this University raises from the team is hard to find, common sense will tell you the amount is far from being modest. For example, Eddie Sutton, recently turned down an invitation for UK to play North Carolina in next season's Tip-Off Classic. When asked why he rejected the invitation he stated, among other things, an exhibition game at Rupp Arena, which would make around $50,000, would have to be canceled.

I just think it would be appropriate if this University recognized the birth of this great man. After all, he is partly responsible for UK being a powerhouse.

Of course money is not the only thing this school gains by having a quality basketball program. Prestige, respect and a tradition of being a winner are some of the additional benefits.

In light of all this, it's interesting to note black enrollment has been consistently declining at UK. At the moment, blacks make up a mere 3 percent of the 21,000 students who attend this University.

It's starting to look more and more like the old-slave south around here. The black minority is being used to bring about very nice profits for the white majority. I realize, of course, the black basketball players receive free educations in return for their talents, but the cost of these scholarships can usually be covered over the course of their freshman year. That leaves three years of profit for the University. Not a bad investment if you ask me.

Now don't get me wrong. I'm a die-hard fan of UK basketball, but I'm also a die-hard fan of Martin Luther King Jr. I just think it would be appropriate if this University recognized the birth of this great man. After all, he is partly responsible for UK being a powerhouse.

I hope our new president, unlike Otis Singletary, will take this into consideration and propose in the future that the UK dismiss classes every Jan. 19 in order to officially recognize the birth of Martin Luther King Jr.

Hard work, determination prove position for deserving Cats

Hold on a minute. Before we get caught up in this year's NCAA hoopla, let's take a moment to briefly evaluate a team. A good team. A team from this state. A team that "did" deserve to get a bid to play for the national championship.

The Kentucky Wildcats team. Before they toss up the ball for the first game of the tournament down in Atlanta, we need to give credit where credit is due.

And credit should go to the UK players and coaches. At first glance one might think the Cats had a disappointing season.

And by finishing the regular season at 18-9, by the near-impossible and ever-demanding Kentucky Wildcat fans' expectations and standards, they might be correct.

Contributing COLUMNIST

But taking into account all the pitfalls, problems and rumored controversies of team dissatisfaction this squad has overcome this season, the fans should be satisfied and, more importantly, encouraged. The Cats had a good season.

It is important to remember that this is the squad that lost three starters from last season's 32-4 squad that finished one game shy of the Final Four.

The Cats had to contend without: Roger Harden, the outstanding floor general and game-winning clutch shooter, Kenny "Sky" Walker, the All-World Mr. Everything (both to graduation); and to injury, Winston "Killer Bee" Bennett, the 6'8" rebounding muscle man who was a pre-season All-American pick. Gone with those players was a combined 53.3 percent of the offense and 51.1 percent of the rebounding.

And this season the Cats were led in scoring by a freshman. Even though Rex Chapman is probably the best freshman this side of J.R. Reid, it's still amazing that UK won 18 games with Rex leading the way. And even Reid is supported by a great cast of players, including All-American guard Kenny Smith.

The Cats this year lost only one non-conference game and owned an 8-1 record. That lone non-conference loss came in Bloomington, when UK lost to Indiana 71-66. And if they had shot a decent free-throw percentage, (they hit 5 of 15) they might have won.

They had big nationally televised wins over Oklahoma, Navy and Alabama. And a sweet 34-point victory over defending champs Louisville on the Cards' home court.

Even though a few SEC foes had their fun this season getting rare wins over Kentucky, the Cats still finished tied for third in the league. They did all this without a legitimate center and without a strong, proven inside threat.

Not writing off the rest of the post-season play yet, UK fans everywhere should be encouraged and anxious for next season to roll around.

That's when, according to many, the Wildcats will sport the finest freshman class in the nation.

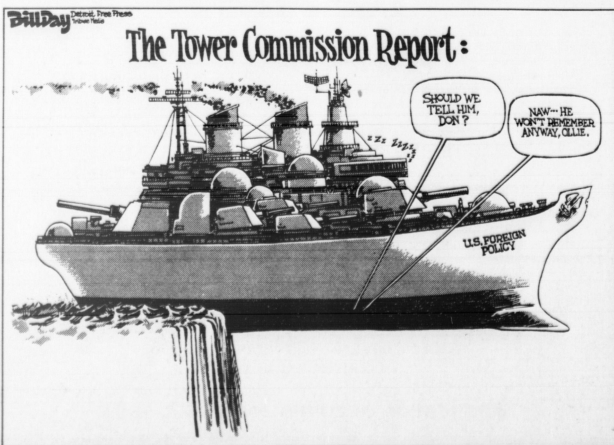

Bringing their impressive credentials and talent (and much-needed rebounding and scoring strength) to Lexington next season are: Florida's 6'8" Jonathon Davis, California's 6'10" LeRon Ellis, Texas' 7'1" Johnny Pittman, Georgia's 6'6" (guard) Eric Manuel, and home-grown stars 6'7" Deron Feldhaus, 6'11" Sean Sutton and 6'7" hold-over Reggie Hanson.

Next year will be the year for the Cats to avenge the licking they took with their return to dominance — in the SEC and nation.

And don't forget UK loves to take NCAA titles in years that end in "8" — '48, '58 and '78.

Charge against 7-year-old questioned

LOUISVILLE — The grandfather of a 7-year-old boy who was shot to death says the family was startled by the decision to charge the boy's young friend with murder.

"I can't hardly believe it," said Russell Wells. "A 7-year-old — I can't understand that myself."

A child psychiatrist and a local advocate for children's rights also questioned the decision to charge the child.

Dr. H. Otto Kaak, director of the child psychiatry division at the University of Kentucky Medical Center, said he does not think a child so young comprehends the finality of death.

"We think it's usually around 8 years of age that kids are able to understand death. They talk about 'Grandpa died, but I'll see him next week,'" Kaak said Tuesday.

Texas may let prisoners have condoms

DALLAS — Prison officials, concerned about 14 inmate deaths from AIDS, say they will consider giving condoms to prisoners to keep the disease from spreading.

Texas would be the second state, after Vermont, to allow condoms in prison.

James Riley, deputy director of prison health services, said Tuesday that a policy which forbids possession of condoms is under review.

"I have a hunch we're releasing a lot of (AIDS) carriers into society, without society knowing about it," said Charles Terrell, chairman of the governor-appointed Texas Criminal Justice Task Force, which recommended the policy review.

At least five inmates have acquired immune deficiency syndrome and tests have shown that 32 others carry the AIDS virus, Riley said.

Teen booked after copter crash kills 3

IRVINE, Calif. — A teen-ager who had been trying to elude authorities was booked for investigation of murder after two police helicopters pursuing a stolen car collided, killing three people, officials said yesterday.

Vincent Williams Acosta, 19, of Anaheim also was booked for investigation of residential burglary, grand theft auto, possessing stolen property, evading arrest and reckless driving, said Irvine police Sgt. Dick Bowman.

"He was directly responsible for their deaths because of his recklessness," Bowman said.

Formal charges have not been filed, but under California law people committing felonies may be charged with murder if deaths result from the crime.

Buses collide, 12 dead and 20 injured

NEW DELHI, India — A bus carrying a wedding party collided with a minibus in western Rajasthan state yesterday, killing 12 people, the United News of India reported.

At least 20 others were injured, seven of them seriously, the agency said.

The accident occurred near the city of Udaipur, 215 miles southwest of the Rajasthan state capital of Jaipur.

Police said the cause of the crash was not immediately known, the agency said.

The program is being funded by the Kentucky Council on Higher Education, he said, with an allocation of $119,000.

Gaines said students will attend three classes each day of the program. Such topics as computer science, communication, foreign languages and history will be taught.

According to yesterday's article in the Lexington Herald-Leader, two satellite programs are also being directed by UK at Eastern Kentucky University and Kentucky State University.

The 100 students involved with the program were picked from large junior high schools with the largest black enrollments.

Gaines said one of the most beneficial factors of the program for the students is the increase in their outlook for the future.

"We feel if we can take these black students and give them some enhanced classes they'll get the feeling that college life is, in fact, possible," he said.

After their participation in the program, Gaines said UK will keep in touch with the students through their school counselors to see how many actually make it to college.

About 300 people chosen from those receiving blood cholesterol screenings will be asked to participate in the projects.

The research will consist of a controlled dietary program, which in some cases requires commitments from subjects to be viewed for long periods of time, ranging from two months of testing the effects of fish oil capsules and fibrous foods, to two years of an intensive dietary supervision.

Each of the four experiments will be headed by researchers from various scientific disciplines in the Medical Center.

One of the experiments may find a link between water-soluble fibers and the secret of serum, a type of cholesterol linked to heart attacks, Hairston said.

In another experiment doctors will use fiber-enriched diets as the main element in determining how such

After a brief debate Wager said the "FOI can be virtually useless" due to the red tape surrounding the release of information.

"They (Federal Bureau of Investigations) have all kinds of ways they can keep you from getting things if they don't want you to have them," Wager said.

According to Rogers there is also a problem with the time it takes to get a document after the initial request is made. He credited this problem to the large number of requests made by people other than the press.

Before the FOI Act was established Wager said to get information, one had to "steal" it.

UK outduels Cumberland in 6-4 victory

By C.A. DUANE BONIFER
Staff Writer

Two years ago, Mark Blythe remembers how much talent the UK baseball team had. Several of the team's players were signed by professional clubs.

Expectations were high for that team, but too many players concerned themselves with individual goals and prevented the squad's true potential from surfacing, Blythe said.

This season the talent isn't as great as it was during Blythe's first year, but the team effort is much better, and that has resulted in the Wildcats jumping out to a perfect mark of 8-4—the best in Coach Keith Madison's nine-year career at UK.

"I think everybody is playing as a team right now," the Lexington Bryan Station graduate said. "People are trying to execute. They're not so much trying for the personal statistics but for the 'W' for the team."

Yesterday afternoon UK chalked up "W" number nine as the Cats pounded out 10 hits and six runs to top the Cumberland University Bulldogs of the NAIA 6-4, before a sparse Shively Field crowd.

The game began as if it was going to be a hitter's contest with both teams scoring three runs in each half of the first inning.

UK finally took the lead in the bottom of the sixth inning by reeling off three consecutive singles into left field.

Darin Rieman began the rally for the Cats and scored the winning run when Blythe rapped an 8-2 pitch into shallow left field.

"He'd been bringing the ball in on me the first two times at the plate," he said. "I was really upset with myself because I didn't get the bunt down (on the first two pitches). I was really happy when it turned out the way it did."

Besides the first inning, we never could string together a series of hits," Madison said.

Dean Smith should have the Tarheels swingin' in the Bayou Country

The 1987 NCAA basketball tournament may be as exciting this year as it has ever been.

This year's basketball season featured the new 19-foot-9 three-point shot, which, combined with a lack of dominant players (Navy's David Robinson notwithstanding), led to a new level of parity between the nation's supposed best teams.

Gone from the field of 64 teams is defending champion Louisville, whose 18-14 record viciously mocked its preseason top five prediction.

Early favorites Auburn, North Carolina State and Georgia Tech barely squeaked into the tournament. Other teams such as Temple, Alabama, Georgetown and DePaul have muscled their way into the top 10 with yearlong consistent performances.

Looking at the NCAA pairings, it seems almost certain that UNLV, Indiana and North Carolina will reach their regional finals. Alabama, Georgetown and Syracuse are also likely to reach the Final Eight.

Nothing is certain, however, in view of some of the tremendous upsets that have marked this season.

This yearlong parity makes any NCAA tournament predictions risky, if not just out-and-out guesswork.

North Carolina, Indiana, Clemson and Texas Christian did not finish the regular season well but are seeded in the top 16. On the other hand, Missouri, Louisiana State, North Carolina State and Notre Dame are on hot streaks but are seeded fairly low.

As far as UK's chances are concerned, things don't look good for the Wildcats.

Wes
MILLER

UK is involved in one of the most evenly-matched of the first-round games. The Cats will take on Ohio State, a team built around star forward Dennis Hopson. UK should beat the Buckeyes if it plays them like it played Navy earlier in the season—allow the star to get his points but shut down the rest of the team.

UK will have its hands full with Georgetown, one of the hottest teams in the land. If UK can get by the Hoyas, it would stand a good chance of reaching a Southeast regional showdown with inter-conference rival Alabama. But it doesn't seem likely.

It's unfortunate that UK couldn't land the same seed in the Midwest regional.

And who will win the tournament? Despite UNLV's 33-1 record, despite their coach's tendency to choke in the big games, despite the fact that Al McGuire and Dick Vitale are singing their praises, and despite the fact they are entering the tournament on the "heels" of a one-point upset by second-division North Carolina State in the finals of the ACC Tournament, North Carolina has all the tools to win the 1987 NCAA Tournament.
