A Toast To UK's New Horse-Production Class

It seems to this newspaper that no more appropriate course could be taught at the state university of the race-horse capital of the nation than a course in horse-breeding and training.

In the past it has been rather paradoxical, but nevertheless true, that Kentucky, undisputed equine asparagus-bed of America, has been turning out young horses in abundance, but few young horsemen.

Adaptation to this campus would require changes, certainly. Even so, it would be difficult to eliminate under this plan that common ground of friendship on which student-faculty relations prosper.

Evolution Or Devolution? Etiquette, from the time pre-historic man asked his neighbor over to the tree-house for a dinosaur steak dinner, has been one of the important marks of an educated and cultured man or woman.

Illness may have been the reason for so many students leaving convocation before Judge Dorothy Kenyon had finished her vocational speech during the recent conference. Surely it couldn't have been that bad.

Students show signs of culture when they refrain from rushing to the side doors of the hall as Sunday afternoon concert programs end.

Just some of the little things that count! These are the courtesies which give the impression of hospitality or rudeness to a guest on the campus.

Informality. Is That The Answer?

The idea that student-faculty relations should be improved is no longer novel. But, usually, when advocates of more harmony settle down to actualities they find themselves with the alternatives of a reception or a forum.

Forums, on the other hand, at their best, serve a useful purpose as intellectual stimulants. Even here, however, the "forgotten man" of the faculty and of the student body is seldom called upon.

Does the University of North Carolina have the answer? Week before last, the University held its sixth annual student-faculty day.

Silly, Isn't It? But Maybe We Need Frivolity... Following this program, dormitories held open houses for professors and students.

The afternoon featured a carnival to which general admission was two cents. Bingo games, acrobatic acts, skits, music, weight-guessing, darts—throwing—all were present at the affair.

Early in the evening, at the student-faculty jamboree, the student-elected student queen and faculty queen were crowned as a part of the jamboree's musical review which featured campus talent and script.

Adaptation to this campus would require changes, certainly. Even so, it would be difficult to eliminate under this plan that common ground of friendship on which student-faculty relations prosper.

Behind The Eckdahl

Miss Jessie Francis, a member of Delta Delta Delta, a sorority, called to our attention recently a situation that should be remedied.

It seems that over in the physical education department there is a course in riflery for women. Now there may be some room for argument as to whether women should be taught marksmanship since they may put it to distasteful use in later life.

The trouble is that they teach the women to shoot prone, which means lying on their stomachs. This is bad. As Miss Francis pointed out, she is a good marksman but should she go hunting and see a bear, or quail, or rabbit, or something, she would immediately have to flop to the regulation Army prone position before she would be able to hit anything.

We recommend that the physical education department immediately do something about this.

Here is a little problem that we offer to students who wish to keep their minds alert. It ought to be a snap for engineers, math majors, and others of their ilk.

A tank of 10 gallons of water has a temperature of 80 degrees. It cools at a uniform rate of five degrees every three minutes. At the end of 15 minutes a man pours into the tank a gallon of water of such temperature as to cause the total temperature to rise 10 degrees.

Go Chase Yourself Department (The following doggerel was found fastened on the bulletin board in the Kernel news room.) New Masses' red.

The Nation is pink; Eckdahl is Tory And how he does stink!

Our friend Butch writes as follows: "A snob is a person who is trying to live down the humiliation of having been born equal to other people."

It has been our observation that the professor who comes to class five minutes early is very, very, very. In fact, we'd go almost so far as to say that he's in a class by himself.

A question of what is the right mode of action has been puzzling us for the last few days. So we'll pass it on to our readers. It's this: If a conscientious young man is walking down the street and a woman's hat blows off her head and lands in front of him, should he, being a conscientious young man, pick up the hat, or should he step on it? Very puzzling. Very puzzling.

We can't prove this but we heard that one member of Delta Delta Delta, a sorority, answered the registration-card question, "Parents' names:" by writing, "Mamma and pappu."

Silly, Isn't It? But Maybe We Need Frivolity

Pros And Cons On ROTC Are Found In Editor's Mail

An Answer To Sanders... To The Editor: The ringing phrases embodied in the verbose letter of Mr. Arthur Sanders, a sophomore, tend to produce in most readers who are blessed even with a minimum of awareness a mildly tireome feeling accompanied by chronic yawning.

Mr. Sanders' naive astonishment at the result of The Kernel poll on compulsory ROTC training is one of the most convincing indictments of the tenets and teachings of that organization that I have ever read.

Mr. Sanders' remarks are so amusing that I have ever read when he crassly remarked that "there is nothing about the 'ROTC' which is really so objectionable as the fact that it is so delightful. That boy should be pickled and exhibited somewhere."

In admonishing you, Mr. Telegraph, to drop your highly commendable "Peace, it's wonderful" attitude (a phrase which Mr. Sanders doubtless borrowed from that other great American, Father Devine) he is advising that you adopt his own glib, principled, his obvious desire for war anyway, instead of ROTC.

I can rest the least bit surmised about the damaging effects of Mr. Sanders' tin-soldier arguments. As long as he continues in his present intelligent vein, he will be fortunate if he is able to make a bronze bust hold still and listen.

ROTC Needed... To The Editor: I feel that the point you "would like to stress" is not the one Mr. Sanders "brings out" in his letter. In fact, it is merely incidental to the body of his note, and the focusing of attention from his central theme is thus averted.

I agree with you that compulsory military training is not pleasant. In fact, few of our duties as citizens belong to us, but the average college student little comprehends, or cares to, the full implication of these duties.

In a world of practical politics we can work for peace and democracy—stand against war as an instrument of national policy. Still we realize that as a nation foremost in the world, we can never afford to be in the condition we found ourselves on our entrance to the world, in this respect.

Students who are interested in becoming guides at the League of Nations pavilion at the 1949 World's Fair can volunteer their services to the League of Nations association. Knowledge of and an interest in international relations is required.

The guides will serve the double purpose of welcoming visitors and conducting them through the Pavilion, explaining the work involved in the various rooms.

After three or four "careful" freshies had rolled out a rather explosive barrel at the winking hour of the night before, the awful word sprang from Pat's hall, Friday night that the whole dorm would be socially isolated until the guilty parties confessed.

Here's a tale of Mariam Gardner: this dutiful miss went to her gym class last week as she knew it would be a dull affair. She was sitting around waiting for the class to assemble when suddenly the room became alive with football players.

Do you aspire to radio fame? If you do, don't forget that opportunity will be presenting you with the first to realize the faculty's Wednesday, inviting you to have one of those cherished auditions in the Union.

It's the "scholarly attitude," not the curriculum, that counts.

In last Friday's column, we opined that the St. John's Plan for education, though ideal in itself, might not work so well in an institution which has a large and melting-pot type of student body.

To begin with, we would like to point out the irrelevance of such a challenge. Who are we students to go around censuring educational practices when even those who have wrestled with the problem for a lifetime are at loss for an answer?

That a student is capable of feeling out the intricacies and that he is entitled to protest against those malpractices, are we think, fairly obvious. To correct them, however, is not his responsibility. Therefore, the student should endeavor to make a positive diagnosis, and should leave the cure to more mature minds.

How often do we step to find that the educational process in reality is a sort of vicious circle that grows into a reverse when we spin out around and enlarging our vision? We go to accounting class and we think of accounting in terms of accounting and nothing more.

A curriculum is all this — plus something else; namely, a scholarly attitude and an objective point of view. The student's task, it seems to us, should be to try to acquire and to utilize this point of view. It is something we must do; no one can do it for us, and until we have acquired it, we may as well let the curriculum go hang.

After all, anybody can make out a schedule-card.

Coed Corner

Most people, especially men, seem to have the idea that the average girl has nothing better to do than think about her own clothes and watch the fashion notes. But Carol Coed, (and remember, she's our typical and average campus), disproves the theory because she pays just as much attention to the outfits of men as she does of those of the weaker sex.

Carol remembers what Bill wears. She notices whether his clothes match, and frowns ever so gently when he wears a green tie and blue shirt. She thought Reggie Palmore deserved a feather in his cap the other day when he wore a soft-colored checked blue and brown suit, a blue shirt, blue and red figured tie, and red socks. The remarkable thing about his outfit was that all shades toned in together perfectly.

Overcoats are a dead give-away. Carol can usually tell whether a man is going to be a well-dressed one by his overcoat. The man in the good-looking overcoat is pretty apt to be the one who is always immaculate. Joe Houlihan is one of those persons, and his well-tidied, well-kept coat shows it. A tan camel's hair overcoat lets the public know that Arthur House is the well-dressed person.

There is a small group on the campus who could appear in sack-cloth and ashes, and Carol Coed would probably think the group still immaculate. Bob Reusch and Harry Alexander are two members of this group who have built up so much prestige that they could well rest on their laurels without buying any new spring clothes. They

The University Men's Glee club of 60 voices, under the direction of Donald Allton, presented the University Musicals last Sunday afternoon in Memorial hall to a highly enthusiastic audience of 1200.

Following the singing of the popular song, "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes" by Jerome Kern, the glee club presented what was to be the outstanding number on the program, "The Night Is Young" by Sussie.

As a very pleasing contrast, the women's sextet presented such songs as Debussy's "Beau Soir," Weaver's "Moon Marketing," and "Villa." The voices blended nicely and the intonation was generally good. The singers were warmly applauded and changed the audience with an encore.

After opening with "Alma Mater," the glee club gave excellent renditions of Bach's "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," Arved's "Ave Maria," and another number of Bach's, "O How Fleeting, O How Cheating," and continuing with "The Silver Swan" by Gibbons and Keighly's "All Creatures Now Are Merry Minded."

The rallying, lively compositions "Sea Fever" by Andrews, and "Nine and Ninety Monkeys" by Campbell, DeLo, which followed, drew considerable applause from the audience.

Predicting a horse race winner, especially two and a half months before the race date, is like picking your teeth when you're out with Hely Lamarr—it just can't be done.

Such a premature forecast, I admit, must necessarily be inspired by a dash of the same madness that prompted the first man to span Niagara on a tight rope.

Nevertheless, after a quick session with my crystal ball shaved and shined especially for the occasion, I am ready to dictate to you, and a panting word, the winner of this year's Kentucky Derby, which barring presidential shuffle, is scheduled for May 4.

I didn't have to hurry through this equine essay and go trim the wicks on my lamps, I would gladly conjure up the place and show horses, but as it is I can only tell you Bimelech will win the 1940 harness classic.

OFFENSELESS CATS DROP 27-23 DECISION TO CHEST AND VOLTS

Returning to the basketball dorms, an erratic shooting team of Kentucky Wildcats hit their offensive low of the season in dropping a rough Southeastern Conference game to the Tennessee Volunteers Saturday night in Knoxville.

After a dismal first half which ended with Tennessee on top by 19-11, Kentucky turned in a spectacular last half defensive show but was never able to click offensively.

As the second half opened Jim King pivoted under the basket for a crisp Johnson hit with a foul and then scored on a fast break before Parsley connected from the side.

Baltimore added a couple of foul chances. The second half was aged four minutes before the first score, a foul shot by Thomas. DeLamain immediately countered for the Cats with a foul, but his effort was matched by Luttrell. With eight minutes to play the Cats were trailing by 22-14.

After Luttrell had hit with a long shot, Allen burned the hemp with two shots. The Vol led went to 28-18 as Thomas and Fox hit with fouls. As the game ended Jim King and How Combs followed a foul shot by Luttrell with field goals.
