CAMPUS Dismount signs disappearing from posts

Dismount zone signs have been disappearing from Central Campus. UK Police Chief W.H. McComas said yesterday that "a significant number of signs" have been taken out of the ground. McComas said the signs will be replaced with signs with poles that have a device that makes them difficult to get out of the ground. Also, McComas said the biggest problem police have had is finding bikes chained to the rails of wheelchair ramps. "Any bike blocking a wheelchair entrance will be removed and impounded."

Yates released, charged with possession

Gregory Wayne Yates, the engineering senior who fell while scaling the Funkhouser Building was released from Human Hospital Tuesday. UK Police Chief W.H. McComas said yesterday hat Yates has been charged with carrying a concealed deadly weapon, a felony offense. Police found a loaded .22-caliber pistol in Yates' backpack and a box of ammunition. Yates tried to climb the front of the building last Friday morning, but fell from the about third floor.

University Senate may endorse plan to call for funding

By Stephen Trimble

A position paper that calls for a $106 million boost to state funding for higher education and state funding for higher education and shiking college tuition, has been a supposed by the University Senate Council, officials announced yesterday.

The position paper, sponsored by the Kentucky Advocates for Higher Education, will be submitted on Sept. 11 to the full University Senate, a body of about 120 faculty, staff, students and retirees that make UK's academic policy decisions, said Gretchen LaGodna, Senate Council chariwoman. ROTC honors top cadets in ceremony

Seven awarded scholarships

By Bruce Mee

The best cadets from the spring and summer semesters were recognized for their efforts yesterday at the Army Reserve Officers Training Corps 1995 Fall Semester Awards Ceremony. The awards American Sement of the Semester Awards Ceremony in the Buell Armory were seven ROTC scholarships of varying amounts and several awards for both scholastic achievement and scholastic excellence.

achievement and scholastic excerlence.

Those cadets who won ROTC scholarships were: Robert Adcock, Laura Luciano, Shannon McDaniel, Cynthia Reilly, Nathan Reinchold and Mark Wyssbrod.

Dawn Daulton and Jason Tussey both won the Physical Fitness Award for earning perfect or near perfect scores on their fitness exams.

Also, Cadet Brent Allen won near perfect scores on their fitness exams.

Also, Cadet Brent Allen worthe National Sojourners Award, which recognizes him with, among other things, "the highest attributes of Americanism ..."

Also presented with an award was Sgt. Maj. Paul Temmermand, who is retirring after 24 years active duty.

Temmerand was presented the Legion of Merit Award.

Awards and certificates also were given out for the successful completion of special ROTC summer programs.

ROTC CADETS were awarded scholarships by commanders of the Third Brigade during a cerem my held at the Buell

"We have these ceremonies on a regular basis in order, not only to honor and recognize the aca-demic and personal achievements of our students, but to motivate and encourage them," said Lt. Col. Robert Farquhar, professor of Military Science at UK. ROTC provides leadership and management skills critical to tomorrow leaders and we want to help them achieve success in their careers."

The Army ROTC is a four-year program that graduates stu-dents as second lieutenants, with the option of entering active duty, enlisting in the National Guard or joining the Army Reserves. Farquhar said 70 percent of the second lieutenants needed to serve in the military are trained in ROTC programs. "There are over 300 ROTC programs in schools across the country today which provide the majority of lieutenants for the Army," Farquhar said.

"The other 30 percent come from military academies such as West Point."

The Army ROTC has been in existence since the early 19th Century when a small group of colleges worked together and decided to offer training at their schools in response to the country's need for furure military lead-

Course discourages student alcohol use

Program gives students the facts about long-term substance abuse

A new program that encourages students to take the initiative has hit the campus this semester. The new program called On Campus Talk About Alcohol (OCTAA) is now ready and waiting for students who want to help themselves.

themselves.

In recent years, the consequences for violating UK's alcohol policy have remained unchanged.

Generally, an individual is written up or confronted by their hall director; occasionally the situation is dealt with by the faculty of Resi-dence Life.

But now comes a help-oriented program with new rules and facili-tators.

The program is designed to help students become aware of the risks involved in using alcohol and the long-term consequences of substance abuse.

OCTAA is a research-based program giving students statistics and reasoning as to why irresponsible use of alcohol is destructive.

"OCTAA is a helpful health education program designed as a means of educating University students of the long term use of alcohol," said Pat Whitlow, associate director of Residence Life.

This program is not a lecture-based program.

It is a course designed by the community and staff at the University to help students make informed decisions regarding alcohol.

alcohol.

This course is voluntary for those students that need help, but also serves as a disciplinary program for students with repeated alcohol violations.

The program is used for students who have been caught causing damage or inflicting violence while under the influence.

Instead of being written up or kicked out of UK, a student will be required to take part in this be required to take par-course.

The philosophy of OCTAA is that the University provides researched information, but it is the student's responsibility to get help if it is needed.

This disciplinary course treats students like adults and lets the individual make the decision to over help.

students like adults and lets the individual make the decision to get help.

"This program is a self-assessment course which asks the students to reflect upon their goals and current behavior in order to see the interference that alcohol has placed on their life," said Dr. Robert Ferguson, staff psychologist at the UK counseling center.
The course is nearly six hours in length and takes place on Saturdays.

Students are responsible for the program fee, but if help is needed, OCTTA will provide support.

"I became a more aggressive player," LaBelle said. "I always felt that I had to work al. Ittel harder to prove to people that a girl could play with the boys."

LaBelle began her soccer career at age five and has since won numerous awards, including Miss Kentucky Soccer honors for her play while a senior at Eastern. She also received All-America honors while in high school.

The awards haven't stopped coming since LaBelle arrived at UK. In her first season on head coach Warren Lipka's team, LaBelle was named Most Valuable Forward and All-Southeastern Conference.

While Lipka has been impressed with the striker's play, the UK coach feels LaBelle's biggest contribution to the team is her positive attitude.

"Kim loves the game and the competition and really gets behind the team 100 percent," Lipka said. "She really pushes her teammates to excel."

Cats' Curtis learning the tight end position

Position changes happen all the time in sports, especially in football. One of the biggest changes this year for UK is the transformation of junior Issac Curtis III from wide receiver to Issac Curtis III from wide receiver to tight end.

This change was brought on by new offensive coordinator Elliot Uzelac, who runs the two tight end offensive set.

"We needed tight ends really bad," Uzelac said, "He was a very physical football player when he was a wide out.

football player when he was a wocout.

"I figured that if he could gain the weight," Uzelac said, "and learn the position he would be a help to us."

Curtis played at 210 pounds last season at receiver, however, he is listead at 240 pounds this year.

The transition has been going good, 'Curtis said.' That a good sumer because I gained this weight. Once I put on this weight and got has the word "sucker" tattooed on his forehead.

Or at least that's the way campus marketers probably look at us. Oh, everyone complains about University Food Services, book prices, and the countless ways the beneficiaries of modern higher education are parasitically. draining an entire generation of nitwits for verything they're worth, but eventually we kind of get numb to it and accept that our silly little protests aren't going to transform the economy overnight and make that biology textbook $20 cheaper.

Every now and then, though, one of these business-minded geniuses screws up. Instead of pacifying us with slow, painless increases in the daily process of extortion, an agency here or there may be forced either by circumstances beyond its control or by simple mismanagement to demand too much from students.

When parking fees doubled a while back, the excuse was that rates hadn't increased in so in order to compensate for a long period of what must have been sheer grace and warm-hearted consideration for students who couldn't handle a smaller, yearly increase. Thanks!

To the editor:

This letter is in response to the column written by Jason Alexander in Monday's edition of the Kentucky Kernel.

When I first read this article I thought it was making a statement about improving racial inequalities on campus. But as I read it again, I realized that it was nothing more than an opportunity for Mr. Alexander to vent his racial frustrations to the entire University. He mentions the Rev. Jesses Jackson's teachings.

For example, Alexander often refers to "black people taking over UK." How in any way, shape, or form are statements such these going to improve race say: "I only had to lift 100 pounds to get into the department, can you send someone else in?"

I don't know if Mr. Alexander realizes it or not, but not every white man is a racist and not every white man is a racist and not every white man has the "power" as he describes in his column. Rev. Jackson preaches about healing racism, not feeding it. Maybe Mr. Alexander should read up on it more closely sometime.

In closing I just like to say that as a white male on campus I realize that there is a lack of racial equality in minority enrollment and minority programs, but the solution to improving these matters will not be found if we allow our peopletices and biases to guident the same of the properties of the same properties and biases to guident believe that Alexander's article is a perfect example of such biased behavior. I truly hope that Mr. Alexander will some day use his talents to combat racism rather than to help it spread.

Administration ignores real issues to pick on bikers nce again the UK administration has opted for division as a way to keep students from realizing the true problems that face them. The new bike dismount zones are nothing more than a triply resided are served.

from realizing the true problems that face them. The new bike dismount zones are nothing more than a thinly veiled attempt to divert our attention from the greater problems facing UK and its students.

The simple fact that the administration has picked bikes on campus as the issue of the semester (instead of rising copier costs, basketball tickets, etc.) just reinforces the fact that the administration is more concerned about pandering to faculty and staff needs instead of those of the student body. It wasn't students who were complaining about being hit by bikes, it was faculty and staff members who walk around campus during class changes who did all the whining about people on bikes. So instead of waiting an extra 10 minutes to shuffle paperwork across campus, they decide to walk around during class changes and complain about the congestion. Obviously the administration would be aware of this factly that the first significant of the same of the same of this factly all the first significant of the same of the s administration has decided to slowly take away our biking rights, but they also have foolishly allocated police resources to monitor the voluntary compliance of this new rule. So instead of providing police protection at night, who would have caught the nut climbing the Funkhouser Building with a gun early Friday morning and the stalker on South Campus last semester, we now have police officers who stand around telling people to walk their bikes. Obviously UK must think that bikes are more dangerous than armed students since there has been no effort to address this rising problem.

to actually evaluate the operations and structure of the University and to make some hard choices. Banning bikes on the other hand is easy because it only applies to students, and who really chart is alaries. The true problem lies, not in the fact that bikes are being targeted by the daministration. The administration. The administration is only concerned about research and the money that it brings into the University, not the students that it educates. There has center, expand/improve Seaton where the content of the last five years that the administration is going to organize a task force to balance the research and teaching responsibilities of the faculty and recommend a deposition on the other hand is easy that the says to improve the quality of instruction at UK, but it has yet to thappen and probabilities of the faculty and recommend applies to students, and who really concerned about research and the money that it brings into the University, not the students and start building a new Student denter.

Center, build a new fraternity housing area, resurface sidewalks and improve lighting around campus.

These are the issues that face the student body. This is what is important to students.

We need to stop letting the administration divide us into groups, which it can pit against one another, and come together as one student body and demand that our needs be met.

If we don't, the UK student, body will forever be treated as second-class citizens at UK with the faculty and administration as our self-centered overseers.

We should not let them forget that the purpose of this University is to educate the citizens of the Commonwealth of Kentucky first and foremost and that everything else is subordinate to that point.

Starline offers touchtone payment

By Stacy Schilling
Staff Writer
Students who no longer want to wait in line or get out of bed to pay for their Wildcat Calling Service can call Startine and pay their bill using a credit card.

"I think Starline is a lot easier to use than trying to talk to any person," said Mist Abbott, an animal science freshman.
Starline ont only allows students to pay for their bill by hone, but lets students access information about their financial status at the University.

"Starline is an informational line where students can access "I domain and their own convenience."

"I didn't have to wait for office or one of the convenience."

"I didn't have to wait for office or one of the convenience."

What's wrong with seeing a live band? In Lexington, the music scene is pretty diverse, with everything from country to funk to punk and there are some pretty good bands that are really close to making the big time. But people in Lexington would rather sit in some dance would rather sit in some dance club, drinking cheap beer and talking with their friends, trying to pick up members of the opposite sex while listening to droning techno dance music pounding over the speakers thinking that this is the best music since Hootie and the Blowfish.

Don't get me wrong, that could be fun, if there's nothing else to do and if you have lots of money to buy strange girls weird rum drinks.

So I wonder why people go to Maybe they just don't know what is out there in those other clubs, those clubs that have weird names and stages, those clubs where the "alternative" people hang out. Those clubs that have bands with weird names and play music you can't sing along with.

And I'm not talking about cover bands. That's usually the excuse people use when I ask them if they go see any Lexington bands. ton bands.

I would go see a cover band, but I would rather listen to a iukebox.

I think that people just need a little more excitement in their weekends and a little diversity. If you go out and do something different, like seeing a different live band every weekend, it would bring more variety and excitment into your life.

That's where KeG comes in The start of a new school year has many changes, surprises and adjustments. So, welcome to the biggest change in this semester's version of the Kentucky Kernel:

When planning your week-end, pick up KeG on Thursday and find out what bands are playing at what clubs. There will probably be a feature or two on the groups playing and you can tell from those if they fit your interests.

Or if you don't want to go out to a club, check out the other things that are happening in town, from art exhibits to midnight movies.

You don't have to be artsy and hang out in coffee shops to go see a movie without Jim Carrey

SCOTS flaunts hillbilly lifestyle

By Brian Privett Arts Editor

Every now and then there comes along a band that is so weird, you just have to give them a listen.

And then when you do listen, if the music is really good, you are a fan for life.

That's the way it is for Southern Culture on the Skids, which will be playing at the Wrocklage tomorrow in support of its first major label album, Dirt Track Date

Southern Culture on the Skids, or SCOTS to its Southern Culture on the Skias, or SCO 15 to its fans, are a strange mix of incestuous hillbilly music and rock n' roll; a little more twangy than rock-abilly, something the group calls "swamp rock."

The sound of SCOTS comes from the jangly guitar of singer Rick Miller, the steady bass beat of Mary Huff and the funky rhythms of Dave Hart-man, all mixed together in a big old pot like a batch of jambalaya and should be served hot, with some Dixie longnecks on the side.

But these Southern rockers aren't from Bayou country, the group is from the Alternative music mecca of Chapel Hill, N.C., a fact that makes SCOTS even more weird.

SCOTS even more weird.

The group flaunts their Southern hillbilly culture, a white trash, beer drinking, gun shooting, truck driving life style that stands at odds with other Chapel Hill counterparts, like Superchunk.

More than just a bunch of rednecks that learned how to play some of their favorite Lynyrd Skynyrd songs, SCOTS are great musicians, and unlike some more artsy bands, the group never forgot how to have fun.

Songs like "Nitry Gritty" and "Vocator Catal

they are, with slow, walking guitar lines and an easy-going beat.

Besides its music, the group members are known for their antics at live shows, like when they throw fried chicken out to the crowd during the song "Eight Piece Box," which is featured on Dirt

Song writer and lyricist Miller also likes to have fun — writing song titles like "Daddy was a Preacher and Go-Go Girl" and "Fried Chicken Preacher and Go-Go Girl" and "Fried Chicken and Gasoline."

Miller captures everything in his lyrics that are great about the South. Not the old South, but the Jeff Foxworthy, blue-collar white trash version, full of sex and trucks and greasy food.

The group's shows are more Mardi Gras than arena shows, with a party atmosphere influenced more by the beer than the intimate atmosphere of the small clubs the group plays. SCOTS is no stranger to the big time, though. Last year the group opened up for the biggest star in modern rock-a-billy, Reverend Horton Heat and Dirr Track Date is the band's first album on DGC.

SCOTS' two previous albums, For Lovers Only and Ditch Diggin', were released on the indie label Safehouse Records, but no one will ever accuse the band of selling out by going major label.

Dirt Track Date comes from the band's love of dirt track racing, a down-home version of stock car reciping.

"Dirt track racing and Southern Culture on the Skids both got a few things in common: both have a strong regional flavor and a low-budget style that leaves the raw edges showing," Miller said.

Low-class groove hits new highs

By Brian Privett

Southern Culture on the Skids has always been known for its weird brand of rock-a-billy, but on its new album, Dirt Track Date, the group takes its sound to new heights.

The guitar sound of Rick Miller is better than it has ever been, twangier on the more country tunes and crunchier on the harder ones. Mary Huff's bass and Dave Hartman's drums bass and Dave Hartman's drums still have that tight, funky, laid-back groove that they always have had they start your feet tap-ping from the first beat. The album starts off with the straight, rock-a-billy groove of "Voodoo Cadillac," a wicked number with some classic SCOTS lines like, "I met my baby in a parking lot, drinkin' cheap wine and throwin' rocks."

Miller's lyrics tell of low class white teach low-class, white trash love affairs and bad food, like the song "Camel Walk." Here "Camel Walk." Here Miller is trying to sweet-talk his trailer park honey, when he says, "Baby, will you eat that snack cracker in your special dress for me?"

But if you don't

True fans should always be true

t's never easy when that great band you discovered early on and adored through many years and poorly-selling albums suddenly hits the big time, and you are forced to share with a bunch of jerks who don't appreciate the band's richness and perfection as much as you do.

It feels like you've been cheat-

I can't say I'm overjoyed that R.E.M.'s popularity has mush-roomed since I found them, Docu- roomed since I found them, Docu-ment-era, as college rock darlings on the cusp of hugeness.

I'd have preferred having the band for myself and the rest of its small but forceful cult, and I imagine that the people who liked the band before I did wish I'd never gotten my grubby ears on the band.

But I wouldn't wish them failure.

It would be as if I told Michael Stipe, "I love your band, and I hope you make records for a long time, but I hope you sell next to nothing, and it would make me ecstatic if your dreams of having your music touch people all over the world were crushed like a mosquito under my heel. Have a nice day!"

That would be malicious. I don't see where success automatically ruins a band. The only problem with beloved bands get-ting big is that they become large-venue bands. Arena bands.

And, with the exception of exception exception of surprise gigs you're never going to know about, arena bands don't go back. They stay arena bands. An arena is no place arena is no place for a show. unless you want to see your favorite gnats blasting away on their guitars and drums their guitars and drums.

For shows, nothing can replace small, dark, smoky clubs.
They let you get close. You can read the bumper stickers pasted on the guitars, see the strings hum. You can commune with the band.
When I saw Superchunk last year in the Student Center Ball-room, I wasn't but ten feet from the band most of the time. After the show, singer and guitarist the show, singer and guitarist Mac McCaughan strolled out into the crowd and mingled like he was just another party guest. I got to chat with him for 10 or 20 seconds. Very cool. It'd be a little harder to do that It'd be a little harder to do that with Michael Stipe.

People who have followed a band for a long time and see them get big often disown it, which is counterproductive, because they're still the same group of musicians who can still write great songs. They can also decide that anyone who starts liking the band now is a parasite, an idjot that anyone who starts high g the band now is a parasite, an idiot who couldn't recognize the band's obvious genius without MTV pounding its video out 10 times a day. Nonsense. I do not subscribe to the false concept of a "true fan."

People who anoint themselves as such and look down on those who do not meet their idiotic criteria for what a "true fan" is are being grossly self-important and needlessly exclusive. I don't resent latecoming fans. I'm not here to legislate the man-ner in which anyone likes their music

Still, if you consider yourself a fan of R.E.M., for instance, and you don't go back into the band's catalogue and find goodies like Fables of the Reconstruction or Reck-oning, you're cheating yourself out of some music you'd probably enjoy.

But I won't be bitter about it if you don't immerse yourself as deeply as I have. What do I care? I may have "lost" R.E.M., but I think I can live with that. I can share.

There are plenty of other groups who will never get too big, never reach any higher than a small but sometimes forceful cult. The Replacements. Hüsker Dü. They will, now and forever, be mine, all mine. And I love it.
