Planning begins for cutting university budgets

Universities should see 'big picture,' Jones says and universities, are going to have to work together to make the 1990 Kentucky Educational Reform Act work, Gov. Brereton Jones said yes-terday.

As part of that spirit of team-work, Jones warned against a "rift" forming between higher education, which is facing stiff budget cuts, and elementary and secondary education, which was one of the few arcation, which was one of the few areas of state government to escape the budget as during the just-completed General Assembly.

"I don't think that it is advisable to try to focus on one part of education at the expense of another, but we have to start at the very beginning, the pre-schoolers, those people who are in danger of dropping out of the system, and guide then, all the way through the system," Jones said.

The governor, along with State then, all the way through the sys-tem," Jones said.

The governor, along with State Education Commissioner Thomas Boysen, various state legislative leaders and a number of leading ed-ucation advocates from Kentucky's business community, came to Lex-ington yesterday to participate in a teleconference with the Kentucky Congress of Parents and Teachers which was held in Owensboro. The teleconference, which was spon-sored by the Partnership for Ken-tucky School Reform, was broad-sast from Lexington at Kentucky Educational Television's studios at 600 Cooper Drive.

Jones stressed the importance of keeping the "big picture" in mind when dealing with education fund-ing.

"It would be a big mistake to try to create some type of rith between one form of education and another," Jones said. "We're all interdependent upon each other." Most of Kentucky's colleges are dealing with a total cut of 10 percent of the funding they receive from the state government. UK's Community College System was spared 5 percent of that reduction. Several of the presidents at Kieschave opposed funding the state selementary and high schools at the collection of the state of the state of higher education as a sign that it is being ignored in favor of elementary and secondary education. "The cut that higher education s."

"The cut that higher education had to take had to do with the reces-sion and the flattening of revenue," he said.

he said.

"Actually, the part of government that grew ... was health and human services — this has a lot to do with health issues and health care and aid to the population."

... That part of our service delivery, of our gross national product. has just mushbroomed so much because people put a priority on how we meet the needs of the population."

As administrators at UK begin planning to deal with a total $23.3 million cut in state funding during the next two years, the University of Louisville is considering a plan to release more than 30 employees by July 1 and eliminate 100 other budgeted jobs.

UK President Charles Wethington released a memorandum to faculty and staff this week outlingsome of the actions that could be included in a budget plan, which will be presented at the Board of Trustees June 16 meeting.

In the memorandum, Wethington reaffirmed his commitment to avoid layoffs and mandatory salary reductions or furloups if possible. He also pledged to protect academic programs.

"To protect University employees and their jobs, the first portion of these cuts impacted academic programs more than we would have liked," the memo reads. The second cound of cuts will focus on nonfaculty positions, it says.

Another plan the University is considering, according to the memorandum, is possponing some renovation projects.

Chanceltors will be asked to identify problems with any buildings, which are in need of repair, "some of which appears to be rouline maintenance." Wethington said in the memorandum.

He has no specific projects in mind for postponement, he said

Having already raised $126,000, the Student Library Endowment Committee ended its fund-raising efforts to build a new library at UK for this year. Erica McDonald, chairwoman of the committee, said she is satisfied with funds raised and hopes even more donations will be received in the future.

"We're so excited just because we got the opportunity to do something like this. To our knowledge we're the only campism the U.S. whose student body has even attempted to dosomething like this." she said. Barry Stumbo, who serves as the faculty adviser to S.I.EC, said he believes the campaign was very successful because students got involved.

Stumbo said the student fundraising effort has been "unparal-tield in higher education, and I think they've done extremely well."

one has a job to do if the Kentucky program is going to join the South-esstem Conference's eltie and take a huge step toward national promisence. One man who plays a bip part in the direction the program will take is assistant coach Tommy Limbaugh.

Limbaugh's responsibilities read more like a lifetime resume than a snigle position or tule. The assistant head coach is in charge of recruiting as well as coaching the UK tight ends. While a full slate like this may seem to lead to burnout. Limbaugh could not be any happier.

Limbaugh could not be any happier.

As the record shows, Limbaugh has been doing an excellent job as recruiting coordinator. Kentucky has pulled in two top 20 recruiting classes including the 1991 class, which was rated as high as 13th by recruiting guru Max Emfinger. Classes such as this were not always the case before Coach Bill Curry and his staff (Limbaugh included) moved north from Alaman. But, even with two years of successful recruiting, there was something missing for Limbaugh. He yearned to go back to the practice fields as an on-field coach. This past offseason, Curry named thin the new tight ends coach, and Limbaugh finally had everything he wanted.

He describes on-field coaching as the "most fun part of coaching." His enthusiasm easily shines His enthusiasm easily shines through to the other coaches and players. Junior center Matt Branum is one of many who has noticed Limbaugh's high spirits.

"He definitely presents a positive glow on the field, and it rubs off on glow on the field, and it rubs off on the players."

Bramum added that Limbaugh is one of the most politic men he has ever met. "Re's the perfect Southern gentlemen."

"Exuberant," is how Curry described his assistant. "He felt he owed it to his family to get a regulation." But fortball is what makes Limbaugh the happiest. Curry said. While Limbaugh is happy to be back on the field coaching, not fortball with the company of the company o

"We've developed a philosophy

He explained that UK's wish list averages about 100 players. This number pales against the 1200-1,500 names that make up other schools' lists. This allows UK to take a little closer look at the players.

While UK wants only the best players to strap on the pads and wear the blue and white, Limbaugh puts a heavy focus on the in-state high school players.

"We base our philosophy on recruiting the heart and soul of our football team from Kentucky," Limbaugh said. "Our goal is to sign every great player in the state."

Thus far, the Wildcats have been almost dead on with their goals. Limbaugh said that since the new staff has been here, there were 26 in-state players whom the Wildcats wanted. Of those 26, 22 signed with the Wildcats.

When looking at potential Wildcats. Limbaugh has one train of hought. "My thought process is 15 he a person we can with "He added that to play for Kentucky, a player must be able to react quickly and ever the field in a hurry.

"The first thing I look for is quick feet."

While the UK staff tries to dominate the state in recruiting, it goes beyond the state lines trying to bring in talent. Limbaugh has ex-celled in bringing in the "hidden invate" jewels.

One example is James Tucker, from Arlington, Texas.

Tucker, who played wide receiver in high school, had the misfortune of playing for Lamar High School. The team had a massive of fensive line and a very latented running back. To say Tucker was main offensive focal point would be a overstatement. But Limbaugh got a look at him as a junior and the rest is history.

"His feet and quickness," Limbaugh said. "He was a great athlete He was everything we were looking for." Tucker is now slotted at rover on the UK roster.

ter Curry was named the new Wild-cat coach. He was the first to join Curry's staff making it official Jan. 11, 1990. Limbaugh left an asso-ciate athletics director position at Alabama for a struggling Kentucky program desperately seeking a win-ning tradition.

"I missed on-field coaching," ex-plained Limbaugh. But he had to consider leaving his family. Lim-baugh, a native of Childersburg, Ala., has siblings in the Crimson Tide state. "It was hard leaving the rest of the family," he added. But Limbaugh took a look at the bright side of a position at Kentucky and decided the move was right.

"It was an opportunity to work with C.M. Newton and Bill Curry. It has been wonderful. (We are) get-ting the program in its rightful place."

Limbaugh is a very positive man who truly believes in the direction the program is taking. As for what UK needs to achieve the next level of success: "Time, that's all. And it might be sooner than the people think."

Student videos spotlighted in exhibit tomorrow night

Last December, the UK Experimental Video Lab presented the works of student artists in two soldout shows. Called InterFace In Yer Face, it was the first show of its kind at UK.

The Video Lab's current show, Visceral Muse, will feature all new student works plus performance art footage captured on video. The ex-panded 90-minute show will be pre-sented tomorrow night at 7 and 9 in the Old Student Center Theater.

Last Fall, InterFace featured high-tech, cutting-edge works on the theater's large screen. The works displayed sophisticated video techniques like those made famous by MTV.

Showcasing individual styles and statements, videos shown included a gritty, sepia-toned Appalachian folk music video; a kaledoscopic, man against machine vision that metamorphosed and bled all over the screen; a David Lynch-inspired, black-and-while back-alley moth-er's-worst-nightmare; and docu-pop musings on everything from belly-button lint to sex and violence.

New works for Visceral Muse in-clude InterFace exhibitors Ephraim McDowell, Anessa Archart, Ed Bo-land, Lee Ann Holt and Marcy

Crosswhite, featuring Afrolachian (a term coined by local black poet Frank X. Walker) poets and an attack on racism; J. J. Haws' "Bull-horns for Jesses," "Industrial Zen" and reanimated meat; Rachel Coin's "indulgen essnusality" and a tale of revenge against a rapist. Low on funds, the Video Lab has had to rely on scrap appliances and electronic parts found in the damp, cavernous basement of the ancient UK Surplus building.

Students enrolled in Brixey's art classes learn video shooting and re-mixing techniques, including "Mex-ican Interface," a technique named after South American video bandits, who steal copyrighted TV broad-casts by videotaping them for sale or re-broadcast.

"Students opted for the sharper quality of individual first generation master tapes rather than download them onto one poorer quality tape just for the show," said Byl Hensley, president of the Student Activities Board Performing Arts Collective that sponsors the show.

Visceral Muse is showing tomor-row at 7 and 9 p.m. Tickets are $2 at the door. All proceeds from the show will benefit the UK Experi-mental Video/Media Lab to expand their production facilities.

Director focuses on Hollywood for 'Player'

LOS ANGELES - Julia Roberts

LOS ANGELES — Julia Roberts and Bruse Willis make cameos. There's a murder mystery and a last-minute rescue. A little sex, many laughs. Perhaps a moral. But will anyone outside Hollywood care about "The Player?" Director Robert Allman's satiric look at movie studios has bewitched the enteratiament industry. Producers, screenwriters and studio executives clamored for early peeks. The star-laden film sparked spirited conversations across town, and has received rave reviews from movie critics.

After all that, "The Player" now faces the only meaningful test: popularity in the nation's movie theaters. Concedes Altman: "If it just succeeds as an inside home movie,

The movie opened in Los Angeles, New York and Denver April 0 and brought in more than $13,000 a screen. Distributor Fine Line Features said the premiere far exceeded expectations and that "The Player" could gross as much as $20 million. Altman, whose successes include "Nashville" and "Mr4"AS*II," is confident in the universality of his and writer Michael Tolkin's como-dy-drama. The director argues the film is not simply a movelmaking send-up but instead an "essay," a serious inquiry into avarice and corruptibility.

Adapted by Tolkin from his novel, "The Player" stars Tim Robbins as Griffin Mill, a glad handing, mostly talentless movie studio hotshot. When not schmoozing stars, packaging megadeals or ordering different brands of mineral water, Mill sorts through threatening postearly from an angry screenwriter. But its bite is the intricacies and idiocies of filmmaking itself. In an eight-minute opening sequence, Tolkin and Altman show Holly-wood as it really is — a bootlicking chaos of bargaining where class is only summoned while making airling reservations.

"The Manchurian Candidate," in studio shorthand. Larry Levy (Peter Gallagher), a fast-rising exce, attends Alcoholics Anonymous meetings — not because he has a drinking problem but because "that's where all the deals are being made." The laughter these and other industry scenes provoke in Hollywood screenings is largely self-conscious: The ruth hurts. Indeed, Altman says its hard to tell where the movie ends and real life begins. For example, in trying to find a distributor for the independently produced film, Altman showed "The Player" to a variety of studio executives. In one soft screening, Columbia Pretures Chairman Mark Canton asked his projectionist a fa: "My officer was in the projectionist."

Canton asked his projectionist a favore.

"My editor was in the projection booth when Canton called in and said, "Skip the next reel and go down to reel six," Altiman said." (The editor) was on the phone to me at the time and he said, "They just skipped a reel." I said, "Well, just stop the projector and bring the film home.

"And then the Columbia guy says," You can't do that. I have the head of Columbia in there. And I said, "Buster, you don't understand something. I'm doing you guys a courtesy by letting you look at my film."

Although critical of Canton's style, Altman acknowledges anyone

UK Honors Program to present 'Pregnant Abbess'

Back-stabbing, temptation, lust and a pregnant nun? It may sound like the latest episode of your favorite soap opera, but it's actually a medieval miracle play.

UK's Honors Program will be presenting The Pregnant Abbess today at 3:30 p.m. at the Botanical Gardens behind the New Student Center. The play is free and open to the public.

The play dates back to the late 15th century and centers around the abbess of a convent who is devoted to her work as head of the convent and to God.

She gives in to temptation and the story that follows details the discovery of her sin and a mira-cle performed as the Virgin Mary comes to her aid.

It is based on one of the many popular stories of miracles per-

"As we looked at that option, (we und) it will cost you money, at ast initially," Clapp said.

Vice presidents and chancellors have been given copies of the budgets for their particular sectors of the University and will be returning with their plans for implementing the cuts, Wethington said.

U of L is considering more con-in a budget-cutting program that in-cludes the elimination of 100 other jobs currently in the budget.

They will be phased out by ca celing vacant positions, by retinents and by cutting hours.

The reductions are part of $6.7 million in budget savings approved Wednesday by the Board of Trustees' finance committee. The cuts will be submitted Monday to the full board, which generally follows committee recommendations.

"The changes will be painful and far-reaching," U of L President Donald Swain said at the end of the committee's meeting. "There will be fewer classes, larger sections, fewer choices for students and somewhy less time for

The cuts apply to full-time posi-tions, including at least seven facul-ty members by 1993, with the house of several people combined to equal one full-time job in some cases. The number of individuals affected couldn't be determined Wednesday.

No department was more despair-ing after Wednesday's announce-ments than the university library, where six staff members are facing layoffs.

The finance committee rejected Swain's plan to let librarians al-ready on the payroll retain faculty status and have an opportunity to receive tenure, which allows faculty members to remain in a position for the rest of their careers.

Dale Billingsley, vice chairman of the faculty senate, said many of his colleagues were outraged by the idea of taking faculty status away from librarians who were trying to unethical," Billingsley said.

The trustees asked to receive more information about the plan for librarians before the full board meets Monday.

For example, the committee approved plans to cut the equivalent of eight positions in the Speed Scientific School. And the equivalent of nearly 15 positions will be cut from the College of Arts and Sciences by July 1. Most of those — 11.5 — will come from the ranks of part-time instructors or from reduced pay for extra summer or evening teaching by full-time faculty members.

Despite opposition by faculty members, Swain said had beath insurance will be available from the university only if the laid-off workers can determined to standardize the vary only if the laid-off workers can year for such extra teaching. That's "The relieved it's not more layoffs," she said.

Many of the university's non-faculty employees already have been notified, informally, that they will be laid off, said Jenny Madden, chairwoman of the staff senate.

They will get no severance pay, Madden said. And health insurance will be available from the universi-ty only if the laid-off workers can pay for it, Madden said.

Wethington said his figures indicated that higher-education funding had fallen from 16 percent of the state budget in the 1991-92 budget to 14.5 percent during the projections for 1993-94.

"That is a very disturbing trend,"

Saying he is committed "1,000 percent" to the reforms of the 1990 education reform act, Jones said putting together the budget for the next two-year period was a difficult

"I believe we were successful in keeping KERA on track even though, because of the national recession, we did not have all the resources that we would have liked."
Boysen, too, praised Jones and legislative leaders who, he said, "emphatically stayed the course" of the reforms.

McDonald

Barry Stumbo, adviser to the Stu-dent Library Endowment Commit-tee, describes McDonald as being "the catalyst behind the campaign."

"Because of her strong work eth-ic, motivation and enthusiasm, the 'Pack the Stacks' campaign has been a great success," he said.

A native of Louisville, Ky. McDonald played the flute for the Seneca High School band and was active in the Beta Club and student council. However, she said she was not as outgoing, optimistic or vocal as she is now.

"If you would have seen me in high school, you would have wondered 'how could she have gotten to this point?' " she said.

mis point?" she said.

McDonald said a turning point in her life came during her sophomore year at UK. She said her mother gave her the book, How to Speak Your Mind.

"When I read it, it did something to me," she said. "I realized I can do stuff. I can be assertive.

"... If you want something, you have to go get it. You have to fight for your independence," McDonald said as she looked at her big poster of rock star Madonna on the wall. She said she feels that Madonna is an example of this independence.

McDonald credits her mother with helping her develop an incentive to take charge and accomplish

"My mother is the biggest support group I could ever ask for," she said.

Holding down a job and working toward a masters in social work, McDonald's mother raised her daughter alone. She said her mother would make any sacrifice to assure that her daughter could do and have what she wanted. Because of her mother's generosity, McDonald al-ways has been able to indulge in her love for clothes.

Above her desk, McDonald has plenty of family pictures. In addition to her mother, she is close to her two stephorthers and stepsister. Although her family is scattered across the country, McDonald sees most of them during their reunion at Christmastime in Birmingham, Ala.

Along with a close family, McDonald has a great network of friends in Louisville and at UK. However, she said that many of her hometown friends were very pessimistic about her decision to go to UK because they saw it as a racist school.

"Many people told me that there would nothing for me here. They said I would probably end up coming home after my freshman year," she said.

She said.

Yet, McDonald has proved them wrong. One of the things McDonald said she loves most about UK is her experience at Donovan Hall. She has lived there on the first floor since her freshman year. On her door is a plate that reads "Erica Avenue."

Leaving her door open most of the time, any the residents in Dono-van Hall can come by to listen to her CD player, eat her food, borrow her clothes or get some honest ad-vice. In the past, McDonald has served as a resident adviser for Donovan and president of the Resi-dence Hall Association.

"Erica is very supportive of her friends," said freshman Stephanie Carpico, an across-the-hall neighbor. "She seems like she would do anything for anybody.

"Erica is very friendly, sincere and funny. She is always happy," said former roommate Shuvon Da-McDonald's days at Donovan are coming to an end, because she will be moving into an apartment after graduation in May.

"I would not trade living here for anything. Donovan has been like my security blanket," she said.

my security blanket," she said.

In the fall, she plans to work toward a masser's degree in health administration. McDonald said there is too much politics involved in hospitals, and she would like to be a part of changing that.

"Health care should be open to everyone," she said. "Whether you can afford it or cannot afford it, there should be the means for you to have it."

when her mother was a sick child and was not allowed to be treated at a hospital. Her mother was told since she was black she probably could not pay for it. McDonald said this story has served a real purpose in her life.

in her life.

Many of her friends, McDonald said, don't think she has much of a social life. With working the entire weekend, she does not get to do many of the activities she enjoys, like playing tennis, bowling and reading. The pictures of ballet shoes hanging on McDonald's wall are just a poster — she never has been able to pursue that interest. But she's not spiteful.

"We had some groups that didn't want to be involved. We had some fraternities that didn't want to be involved."

McDonald also said that because of low sales, the 'Noon to Moon Testival held by Pl Kappa Alpha social fraternity last month has not made a donation to the campaign as originally expected.

Louis Swift, dean of undergradu-ate studies, has worked with fund-raising efforts on the library cam-paign. He said he believes the stu-dent campaign was a very important part of the fund-raising efforts.

"I think the reason the student campaign was so important is that it was a kind of altruistic giving.... The students are giving to a project which they are not likely to see the benefit of very soon," he said.

McDonald said student fund-raising efforts for the library prob-ably will be turned over to another campus group next year, but no de-cisions have been made yet.

Campus 'activists' go to extremes

Enough is enough!

During the past several weeks, the UK campus has been winess to several acts of extreme destruction and ridiculous protest by an anonymous environmental group.

First, we saw Student Government Association campaign posters tourn down because they were cluttering campus and killing receive begins these posters.

Then students awoke yesterday to see trees on central campus wrapped in white toleic paper and splattered with red paint to simulate blood. I hate to break it to these actical activists, but trees don't bleed. I know it's hard to accept, but they don't — I promise!

While the destruction of the environment is an issue that must be addressed by legislators, there is not in the contraction of the contr

Football team flexes muscles in a 24-hour kidney bash

By DAVE LAVENDER

A hot, glistening sun shone down on Commonwealth Stadium as UK's football team gathered to run a few laps. Only this time Coach Bill Curry had a little surprise for the team: they would run for 24 hours straight. No, Curry isn't a cruel dictator naise money for the National Kidney Foundation of Kentucky. Last nigh the UK football team kicked off the second annual Spring Football FungNun by completing the first lap around the edge of the feel. Then alternating players arrunning in 15-minute segments for electric the player raised during two weeks of soliciting funds by phone. "Thank you for the good weather," said Nick Gardner, executive the player raised during two weeks of soliciting funds by phone. Crouch, who said last year's event raised more than $32,000 for the National Kithny Foundation of Kentucky, received a kidney transplant two years ago.

"We went this way last year, we'll go this way this year." Curry said being superstitious and point gin the opposite direction. "Our team really enjoys getting involved in this project ... It's a great chance for us to give something back to the community. The Important thing is that the victims of kidney disease are the real winners, and that's really all we are interested in. We would sort of like to beat Louisville."

U of L football coach Howard Schnellenberger is the chair of the national program for Spring Football Walks for the National Kidney Foundation. Last year, UK and U of L went head-to-head with UK edging out their Western Kentucky counterpart $34,000 to $33,000. The two teams are also running simultaneously this year.

UK Wildcats Gimel Martinez and Jamal Mashburn will be scooping up ducks from the Lake at the Lexington Green Mall Sunday as part of the KenDucky Derby.

The KenDucky Derby benefits the Lexington/Bluegrass Alzheimer's Association. Martinez and Mashburn will be scooping up little plastic ducks, which will be set afloat about 2 p.m. Sunday. The ducks are numbered to give away prizes to those people who donated $5 to buy a duck. For more information, call 252-6282.

World scholars participate in UK 3-day language event

By TYRONE BEASON

Scholars from around the country and from abroad gathered at the Student Center yesterday for the be-ginning of the 45th Annual UK For-eign Language Conference.

During the three-day conference, foreign language experts will present thesis papers, participate in panel discussions and attend several entertainment events.

More importantly, scholars will be able to interact on an informal level.

"The primary function of it is to provide a venue for scholars to come and talk with each other," said J.L. Greenway, associate professor of English. "This is a way to keep up with what people are doine."

ing."

About 580 people registered at the conference yesterday. Guests came from as far away as France and Spain.

Greenway said the Kentucky Foreign Language Conference is one of the leading language organizations in the nation. The UK conference also is popular among foreign language scholars worldwide.

He said the conference receives praise because it takes place at a full-wrestly that has outstanding foreign language departments.

The foreign language meet continues today at 3:30 with an outdoor play, The Pragnant Abbess: A Miracle Play of the Virgin Mary.

The late 15th century play will be performed by the UK Honors Program at the Botanical Gardens near the New Student Center.

At 8 p.m. in the Center Theater.
Thomas Breuer will give a cabaret performance, including songs and readings in German.
Native German Helga Cummings said the foreign language conference helps to close the gap between cultures and languages.
