Miss Lamb rejoices in the hope of seeing Miss Kelly here on Sunday. Cakes and ale at the Barby show, as before. - Could not Mrs Bryan accompany her, as we are rather in beds than before by half a bed. - Charles suggests that perhaps Mr Arnold will accompany them, which would make a day of it. Do try & persuade him. He shall either have Emma's little bed, and my brother go out, or the latter stay in, & Mr Arnold bed at the Rising Sun. - Do come all three. This is neither note nor letter, confounding first & third persons, and tis Maria's letter, & yet tis written by me.

Yours all yours

Can you articulate this confusion of plurals & singulars? I cannot. Who's I?
