Dear Mr Clayton.

Your offer for the Heptalogia I treat with the contempt it merits, merely drawing your attention to a prophetic passage in the book of Proverbs.

It is naught. It is naught saith the buyer. But when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

So there were designing collectors even in those days. I can fancy a row of old book stalls ranged against the Temple Walls. displaying first editions of Genesis or Moses' choice works - or the History of Susannah the Elders, adorned with choice cuts - un-expurgated - nice copy, very curious.

I wallowed in infancy for three hours last night - I & the Postman.
There is a lovely villain - a bold bad man - who clutches the air & hisses 'Blood' in a beautiful rasping voice & sticks a man with a dinner knife & drops him down a trap 'plash' into the geurgallying river below.

There is his cowardly accomplice, a sailor with the 'jumps', who plays to the Gods, & finishes up by shooting the villain in the back.

There is a man in delirium, a railway accident, - terribly re-alexite, a dose of morphia, a fight, a wife beater, & the inevitable girl - wronged & wronged - who appears at critical moments imploring to be made an honest woman.

Oh. It's grand!

I am not sure who you mean by No 6, but if it be Cousin Alice two birds are simultaneously slain.

I can't re-call the Punch picture.
'Kyd' comes from Portblade

Infernal. Verbal etc I leave to you, but should a you preserve, with enclosed result - Yours

The Rape of the Sabine

The father a life guard - so busy, comes day.

The girl - not exactly - his wife -

What a pity - the man didnt show her the way of guarding a little ones life
