Pembroke Colley Oxford

March 10 1852

My dear Mr Westgate.

If in your opinion Harrow offers advantages and emoluments adequate to your wants and merits, I have nothing to say to your decision.

But I do not consider your health and experience reasons why you should not go to Jersey.

The school has to be formed, and your offer would grow with it, & forth.

When I went to Birmingham I was scarcely older than you are, and I had had no school education at all since the age of 13 when I left a French College.

But I have stated to the admirers of the West how much money he can an advantage.

The two persons selected were an excellent considerable man; but and it is impossible for not possible to find more in case you intend. But I am sure that your pretensions are equal to them:

Personally I should prefer your flight at Harrow where (D.V.) my boys are to be waited.

If your mind be made up here the goodness to permit to accompany etc. I send it there in order to see me first.

Believe me
Yrs faithfully
James Leane
