My dear Sir

I have looked thro' your printed correspondence, & have added a few notes.

Perhaps Mr Prior can tell you where to find Mr Mason. Mr Prior lives at No 11, (Inspector of Hospitals) & Mr Dyce will give you an introduction.

This hardly worth printing a life effort for the ~~unlike~~ ^{unlike} ~~the~~ ^{new} materials can be procured - which is not likely.

It appears to me on further observation that Mason's tubes, is not Steevens' Spectacles, but a different thing. As to one can make out the joke etc as well as the other. I like what you have printed; by me.

I hope you will go on.

Yrs. sincerely
Miss M. M.

MITFORD, JOHN, was born at Richmond, Surrey, 13 Aug., 1781, and educated at Tunbridge School, and Oriel College, Oxford. He obtained the living of Benhall, Suffolk, 1810. In 1815 he was appointed domestic chaplain to his relative Lord Redesdale, and presented to the rectory of Weston St. Peter's; and in 1817 to that of Stratford St. Andrew, both in Suffolk. He died at Benhall 27 April, 1856. This accomplished scholar was for many years editor of the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' and the principal writer in it from 1834-50. He also wrote some poetical works, and edited Grey, Spenser, Milton, Dryden, Butler, Prior, Swift, Young, Parnell, Goldsmith, Falconer, and Vincent Bourne.
