

Hardwick, Philip (b. 1793, d. 1870), English architect, son and father of an architect, built a new hall for the Goldsmiths' Company in 1835, also the hall and library of Lincoln's Inn, opened in 1845. He was elected F.R.S. in 1828, A.R.A. 1839, and R.A. 1841, and was subsequently vice-president of the Royal Institute of British Artists.

189.56R.5

21 Cavendish Square.

2 March 1867.
1867.

My dear Mr Roberts

I return Mr Dickinson's letter, which seems to me outrageous. Pray dismiss the matter from your mind; for at our meeting last night I got the Council to give me the cheque, which I have sent

Hardwell

up to Mr Dickinson with a note from myself.

I thought that would be more civil than letting it go through our Secretary.

Believe me to be

Yours very truly
S. H. Hurdwick

21 Cabendish Square.

21st July 1864

My dear Mr Roberts

Please do not trouble yourself
any more about Mr Dickens's Cheques. I have heard all the facts & I have no doubt the Council will allow me to hand over the money to the Society for whom it was intended. We are not so hard up as to keep any

P. Hardwick 1192 - 1194
R. J. S. as Ambr

donation intended for another Society.

I will write to Mr. Dickenson myself about it; as soon as I have the authority of the Council, without which I, as Treasurer, cannot act. - There will be no necessity for you to reply to a posty letter.

Believe me to be

Your very truly

J. F. Bardinick