In 1920, with the idea in mind of equipping athletes to best effect, Adi Dassler developed his first sport shoes. For almost 60 years now, he has been following this aim with the same diligence, energy and enthusiasm. Pioneer of the sport shoe industry, his achievements are reflected in approx. 700 inventions and patents as well as approx. 1,800 trademarks and designs. Adi Dassler is concerned not only with the quality and functionality of adidas products but above all with protecting the health of the athlete of amateur or professional status, engaged in competitive or leisure pursuits. Such have been Adi Dassler's objectives ever since he made his first canvas training shoes, his very first soccer boots and also his first running shoes with hand-wrought spikes in the 1920s. And such are his objectives today with the approx. 180,000 pairs of sport shoes being produced by adidas daily in 17 countries all over the world. The self-same standards also apply for sports- and leisurewear and sporting equipment, in short for the entire adidas range.

The acceptance of Adi Dassler into the "Hall of Fame" of the US Sporting Goods Industry is a great honor to him and to adidas, and at the same time represents the continuation of adidas' commitment to sport world-wide.

Welcome to The University of Tennessee!

We are pleased to serve as host for the first Women's Basketball Championship Tournament, which includes teams from universities in the southeast whose men's programs make up the Southeastern Conference.

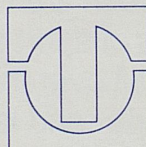

The tournament indicates the growing importance of women's athletics in our region, and we believe it is the forerunner of many similar events in the future.

We hope you have an enjoyable visit on the Knoxville campus and an exciting basketball tournament.

Sincerely yours,

Edward J. Boling
President

Dear Participants:

It is a special pleasure to welcome participating institutions and their athletes to the First Women's Southeastern Conference Basketball Championship. The tournament represents a milestone for the S.E.C. schools, for the region, and for women's athletics. The University of Tennessee, Knoxville is honored to host this historical event.

I hope that the tournament is a significant success for the universities represented, their fine athletes, and supporters of women's athletics.

Sincerely,

Jack E. Reese
Chancellor

LETTER FROM GLORIA RAY Athletic Director, University of Tennessee

On behalf of the entire Women's Athletics Department of the University of Tennessee, I welcome you to Stokely Athletics Center for the first Women's Southeastern Conference Basketball Championships.

The strong traditions, rivalries, and competitive nature of the winning programs of the SEC member schools is sure to make this an outstanding tournament. We at the University of Tennessee are proud to host the first championships and look forward to sport-excellence competition.

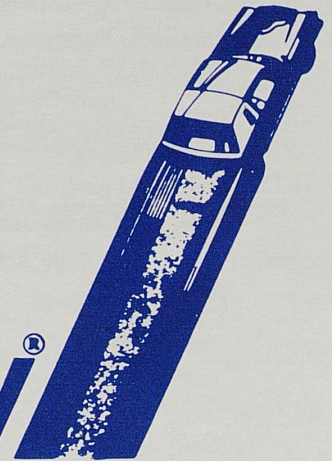

Whatever your role or interest in the SEC Championship may be, we hope your involvement in this event is exciting and your stay in Knoxville pleasant.
