To find their future, the Cats were forced to play musical quarterbacks — in the process they forgot their past and perhaps their present — and Magard was left without a seat when the music stopped.

Maggard needed only 434 yards to move into fifth place on the all-time UK passing list. However, he has played only five downs this season and thus far has not attempted a pass.

The injury also shattered Maggard's chance to suit up for the Bat Cats baseball team. Maggard, who was drafted by the Kansas Gity Royals out of high school, was an All-State pitcher.

Over the years, after pouring over the ever-increasing amount of information on this subject, I have reached the conclusion that the assassination was the result of a conspiracy between powerful men in the Mafia and the Central Intelligence Agency, working together to achieve the ultimate act of revenge against a president with whom they could not "do business," a man who had sought to strip them of their il-

During Prohibition in the United States, from 1920-1933, Joseph P. Kennedy Sr., John Kennedy's father, made part of his fortune by supplying Scotch whiskey to the Eastern seaboard with the help of organized crime, who in turn controlled the distribution of illegal alcohol. The elder Kennedy had high political aspirations for his second son, John, who after successfully winning a Congressional seat in 1946, continued to climb the political aladder. partner, Joe Kennedy, now the president, members of the Mafia thought that they may have had a friend in the White House. They quickly discovered that this was not the case.

During Kennedy's short presidency, he and his brother, Robert, who was then attorney general, engaged themselves in a relentless crusade against the Mafia, which has not been equaled since. In three years, organized crime convictions increased from 35 before Kennedy was elected to 160 during his administration's tenure, and the number of Mafia figures targeted for prosecution rose from 40 to 2,300. At one point, Robert Kennedy even had Carlos Marcello, Mafia boss of the Southern United States, hand-cuffed in public and immediately deported by airplane. Marcello was left on a mountain in Guatemala, without even a change of clothes or suitcase, feeling bitter, humiliated and vengeful.

This compromised the campaign of the Kennedy Administration campaign against the Mafia and made the U.S. government vulnerable to blackmail should the joint CIA-Mafia assassination plot be revealed. Hollywood begins to promote safe sex

By GREG LABER

With the revelation that sports hero Earvin "Magic" Johnson has contracted HIV, America has become even more aware of the importance of safe sex in the '90s.

Although it has been an increas-ingly important part of our lives, safe sex has not made its way into the movies until recently.

In the film, Pep Streebeck, played y Tom Hanks, reaches over for his ox of condoms during a moment f sexual passion. Upon finding tem empty, he decides to abstain.

Even James Bond became a little more aware in Timothy Dalton's first outing as the British secret agent, "The Living Daylights."

Although it is never clear as to whether Bond uses a condom, this is the only film to date in which 007 remained faithful to one lover throughout the entire movie. For James Bond, this is a big step. In the film "Fatal Attraction," promis-cuity leads to a horrifying outcome.

Although Michael Douglas' char-acter does not contract any social diseases from his ill-considered af-fair with Glenn Close, he certainly does pay the consequences.

In the final third of the film Douglas and his family are stalke by his insane and dejected lover.

Returning to the comic approach to safe sex, "Naked Gun: From the Files of Police Squad!" tackled the issue in 1988.

Leslie Nielsen, after proclaiming

Although some efforts have been made by Hollywood to depict safe sex in a positive light, it still has a long way to go.

For the most part all efforts to do so have thus far been comic attempts. Few films have dealt with safe sex as a serious issue.

Plus, for every movie couple who vocates condom use, there are a zen others who don't bother.

Spike Lee's steamy love scene in "Jungle Fever" and Harrison Ford's in "Presumed Innocent" are just two recent examples where Hollywood chose to present us with casual sex rather than the responsible alternative.

Smokeout day tries to put stop to habit

The Great American Smoke-out, which was held yesterday, is the American Cancer Socie-ty's national annual event dedi-cated to giving smokers a chance to quit for a day. The philosophy of the smokeout it-self is that if a smoker can stop for good.

There are several ways to stop smoking. The method you choose depends on the reason you smoke. People smoke for at least one of the following rea-sons: stimulation, enhancement of pleasure, as a psychological crutch, because of a craving, habit and/or addiction to the nic-otine.

Smokers who use cigarettes for stimulation depend on the nicotine to wake up in the moming and organize their energies. Other smokers use tobacco to feel good or to keep from feeling bad. Tobacco can be a "crutch" for some people in moments of stress or discomfort. Habitual smokers light up unconsciously. Smokers who are psychologically addicted crave cigarettes one after another. But most smokers are addicted to the nicotine, the most widespread form of drug dependency in the United States. Knowing the reasons you smoke helps you find the right approach for a successful beginning to a smoke-free life. If you smoke helps you find the right smoke for simulation, you need to identify other ways to get the same feeling; go for a brisk walk or do moderate exercise when the urge to smoke becomes over-powering. If you depend on cigarettes as a "crutch", try to stopsmoking when you are not under stress; work to identify other ways to handle daily stressors. "Cold turkey" is the best method for the psychologically addicted smoker. Habitual smokers need to become aware of their smoking pattern before they can change their habits. Gradually tapering off cigarettes is the best method for someone who is addicted to the nicotine. who is addicted to the nicolands. Since nicotine is a stimulant, the withdrawal will be less severe when the nicotine is gradually reduced in the body.

Paper obligated to reflect diversity in opinions, columns

N. Alan Cornett seems to be public enemy No. 1 on campus this week. Cornett, in addition to being the Kentucky Kernel's editorial editor, writes weekly opinion columns that appear in the paper. In his Nov. 12 column, he tackled a potentially explosive issue — AIDS.

The column contained several statements that have thrust Cornett into a vortex of controversy. His words sparked a candlelight vigil held last night in front of the Enoch J. Grehan Journalism Building.

Organizers of the event were angered by Cornett's view that "AIDS is not an epidemic" and that it "still is primarily a homosexual male disease." Protesters claimed that the Kernel was practicing "firespossible journalism" by printing Cornett's column. They said several of his statements were incorrect and "potentially injurious:"

In reference to an article that appeared on the front page of the Nov. 12 Kernel, protestors said Cornett should have read his own paper. The Associated Press article said that "heterosexual sex has caused the infection of 75 percent of people worldwide."

Although seemingly contradictory to Cornett's column, statistics in the article were based on international — not U.S. — data.

According to a pamphlet released by the American College Health Association, "Approximately two-chirds of people with full-blown AIDS are men who have had sex with other men." UK's Student Health Service distributes these pamphlets free of charge.

Therefore, Cornett's statement, on its face, may not be incorrect. Regardless, Cornett's columns contain statements that reflect his opinion — and his opinion only.

Although Cornett also sits on the Kernel Editorial Board, his columns do to necessarily reflect the views of the paper as a whole.

Critics of the Kernel say the paper should not print anything that may "hurt someone." But if printing people's opinions translates into hurting people, then let us be damned.

people, then let us be damned.

Although members of the Editorial Board may not agree with what Cornett states in his columns, we are sympathetic to his right to state them.

One of the roles of a student newspaper is to reflect a broad range of ideas and opinions. Selecting guest opinions, letters and columns that reflect only our collective viewpoint would be wrong — it would be censorship. We would be doing our readers a disservice if we subscribed to that point

The Kentucky Kernel, and all other publications, are built on the free speech tenets of the First Amendment. To ignore those principles would be a detriment to the paper and journalism as a whole.

Intolerance for diversity of opinion — including "potentially injurious" statements — is no better than intolerance for homosexuals. By preventing the open exchange of ideas, censorihi subverst he one thing than can free us from the strangling girly of bigotry: passionate and unencumbered desired.

Getting facts on gays straight

By Chuck Smith

About 20 UK students have reorganized a group to address the needs of the gay, lesbian, and bisexual people on campus. The group's goals include social, educational and political objectives. The group, GLUE (Gays and Lesbians United for Education), aims to make the larger university community aware of the presence of the many gay and lesbian and bisexual people in its midst. The members of GLUE are saying:

"We're queer, we're here, get used to it."

Some of you may be thinking. "Why don't you just keep quiet." Those who are gay and staying in the closet may be thinking, "Why stir up trouble?" Many other students may be thinking, "Why stir up trouble?" Many other students may be thinking, "I'm really not interested in what you do in the privacy of your bedroom."

The truth is that we gay people are not the ones making an issue out of our sexual orientation, but many other people are. For example, every day many gay men and lesbians are denied employment, or harassed at work, or have difficulty obtaining housing because of their sexuality. Furthermore, making love with my companion in the prevacy of my home is a crime in Kenucky and 20 other states.

Each year thousands of violent crimes are directed at gay people. In neighborhoods where gay people in neighborhoods where gay people are known to live, gay bashers randomly beat and sometimes kill people they suspect of being gay. Gay people are also the target of some legislators and religious leaders who have been quick to blame gay men for the AIDS epidemic, yet oppose safer sex education to prevent its spread.

yet oppose safer sex education to prevent its spread.

We students in GLUE have decided it's time to be political, not politic, and that the most politically significant thing we can do is live openly as gay people.

The gay activist slogan of the 1970s, "Better blatant than latent!" still holds a lot of value for me. I still holds a lot of value for me. I am not interested in being blatant, and doubt if many people are. I don't consider being gay to be the total or even most important definition of who I am. But being gay is an intrinsic part of who I am. I definitely won't go back into the closet, where I am expected to deny part of myself. I will not return to the charade of always being careful to have people think that the man I love is just a good friend, not my lover.

The gay men, lesbians, and bisexuals who reorganized GLUE share sentiments similar to these. We have two messages. First, we are saying we are good people, we don't apologize for who we are, and we won't go back into hiding. We expect and demand to be treated no better or no worse than any other groun of people. group of people

Second, we are saying to gay people who are still concealing their sexuality, "Come out, come out wherever you are." This is not a demand or an accusation, it is an invitation. When you are ready to come out, we are here to support and reinforce you.

Those of us who are out of the closet are out to stay. We are not strange or exotic people. We don't want special treatment. We just expect to be accepted for who we are, full and equal members of the community, with the same rights and responsibilities as everybody else.

Interested people may contact GLUE by writing P.O. Box 647, UK Post Office, Lexington, Ky. 40506-0025. GLUE's office is located in 106 Student Center.

retrollearly titler anises for given persons what many have labeled the "teaching moment." I believe that one of those teaching moments is here for HIV infections, both with respect to the topic at hand and to the receptivity of individuals to listen.

Since Magic Johnson announced is retirement from basketball be-ause of HIV infection, headlines cause of HIV infection, headlines on probably every newspaper in America have dealt in some way with HIV infection or AIDS. Most of the stories are probably accurate. Some, though not necessarily inaccurate, are poorly written. However, few of these stories or editorials have contained statements that are simply in error. Unfortunately, one such error occurred in Kentucky Kernel Editorial Editor. A lan Cornett's column in the Nov. 12 issue. It would seem that Cornet meds to be aware of some definitions and facts before expressing his opinion.

Although I do not disagree with many points that he raises, to make a statement that "AIDS is not an epidemic" and that it is "still primarily a homosexual disease" is not only erroneous but also reflects a major lack of understanding.

ack of understanding.

An epidemic is defined as "a disease which attacks many people in any region at the same time and which is widely diffused and rapidly spreading" (Dorland's Medical Dictionary). HIV infections/AIDS can hardly be classified as anything else but an epidemic. Cornett states that AIDS is still primarily a homosexual male disease. In terms of absexual mate disease, in terms of ansolute numbers — at this moment — in the United States, this may well be true for AIDS; however, it is not true worldwide and it is not necessarily true at this point with HIV infections.

HIV infections.

The problem is possibly easier to understand if one breaks down this national epidemic into multiple epidemics moving at varying speeds and with varying patterns. For example, the epidemic of HIV infections leading to AIDS because of exposure to contaminated blood products is essentially finished. The infection rate among homosexual males appears to be stabilizing. Unfortunately, in the United States at least, the epidemic among the heterosexual population appears to be in its very earliest stages. It is estimated by the Center for Disease Control that heterosexual Population appears and his does not speak to the issue and this does not speak to the issue and this does not speak to the issue of the incidence of HIV infections preceding AIDS.

The point is this: We should be far beyond anyone believing that AIDS is "only" a homosexual disease. We should be beyond the point of failing to recognize that this is a national problem of any of the point of the point of pair of the point of the poi point of failing to recognize that this is a national problem of ex-treme magnitude which is just be-

Cornett continues to state, "we should not expect Congress to in-

I am not an economist; I do not know how much money is being spent for AIDS research compared with research on chronic diseases. with research on chronic diseased.

However, it seems to me Cornett very simple. At this point AIDS is spread by intimate sexual activity and it costs little or no money at all to eliminate or markedly decrease the spread of AIDS.

to enimate of AIDS.

Maybe this is where Magic Johnson can help. Johnson has begun to be a spokesman about the need to practice "safe sex." A strong statement. However, how much stronger the statement could be if he suggested that the only real guarantee of safety is "no sex" outside of a long-term monogamous relationship. Wishful thinking?
Probably — but a starting point.
The fact is, it may simply have never occurred to many individualsespecially young people — that this is an acceptable alternative and a way to prevent the spread of not way to prevent the spread of not only AIDS, but other sexually nitted diseases. In lieu of that, some discussion In lieu of that, some discussion about minimizing sexual partners is appropriate instead of, to quote Magic Johnson, "messing around with too many women." In fact, while one or two "messings around" may be one or two too many, there is certainly less risk with one or two exposures than "messing around" with 50 to 100 exposures over several years.

"messing around" with 50 to 100 exposures over several years.

Certainly, in the context of one or of fifty or one hundred exposures, it is appropriate to talk about "safe sex" (which, by the way, probably should be called "somewhat safer" sex).

I understand full well that in today's society it is not always easy to either abstain form sex or to even minimize sexual activity when being bombarded with "sex" to sell everything from cars to alcoholic beverages. I also understand it may not be easy when the media portray sexual intercourse as so casual an encounter that even Doogie Howser and friends must be shown to be sexually active.

Nonetheless, the facts are simple. Unless you avoid sexual activity outside a long-term monogamous relationship, you are at risk. If you have two partners, you are at slightly greater risk. If you have fifty partners, you are at a much higher risk. The beginning of stopping the epidemic costs no money. If you cannot stay celibate or monogamous, then at least minimize your contracts and try to practice at least mous, then at least minimize your contracts and try to practice at least "somewhat safer sex."

"somewhat safer sex."
Yes, there really is an epidemic and the only way we can interrupt this epidemic with our current state of knowledge is to do what we already know how to do.

Braun's assumptions cause him to misinterpret article on Carlos Turner

To the editor:
I read with great interest Joe Braun's Nov. 18 column, which was rather politely headlined, "Carlos Tumer incident true tragedy." It was fascinating to have him tell me what I had written.

Let me insert a mitigating note right here: Joe Braun is only a freshman working for a college newspaper. Nobody expects him to be John Ed Pearce at this point. But I was disturbed enough by his column that I felt compelled to reply in a manner that hopefully will be instructional to him.

Whoa, Joe. I think you've done ome serious between-the-line eading — an absolute no-no for ournalists. And you got it wrong.

Taking it one assertion at a time

We did not hail Carlos Turner. We sought to describe his life, which might help readers understand why he is alleged to have committed this heinous crime.

We did not give him permission to act in violence based on his past We're not in a position to give permission, and in no way did we condone his alleged actions.

done his alleged actions.

How Braun came to this third conclusion escapes me. We all were very concerned with keeping the story from being too sympathetic to an accused assailant. Assistant Managing Editor Stephen Ford reminded Sports Editor Harry Bryan and myself several times to "be very careful with the tone."

Mr. Bryan and I spent about thr Mr. Bryan and i spent about troops hours dissecting the story Saturday night, much of that time spent do-ing things like changing "Carlos" to "Turner." Use of first names is con-sidered to be more sympathetic than last names, and is more appropriate for straight features.

Nevertheless, I still was unsure that we had done enough, so we asked four other Courier-Journal editors if they thought the tone of the story was too lenient. All thought the story was fair.

In the fourth paragraph of his col-mn, Braun mentioned the headline umn, Braun mentioned the headline that appeared above the story in the Sunday C-J: "Hope and Tragedy." Then Braun wrote, "Hope? Hope that he will get off any charges. The article was highlighted by drawings of Turner, and the whole article was surrounded by photos of him on the basketball court."

To say that we hoped he will get off any charges simply is ludicrous. "Hope" was used in my story because that is what basketball had granted him — hope for a college education, hope for a professional career, hope for a better life.

To imply that our use of art was intended to create a sympathetic overtone shows Braun's decided lack of journalistic knowledge.

Herman Wiederwohl's illustrated Herman Wiederwohl's illustrated photograph of Turner on the front and jump pages was, I thought, exceptional. It set a tone far more somber than sympathetic, and I couldn't imagine a more emotionally balanced depiction.

Perhaps Braun would have pre ferred Turner to be clutching knife between his teeth in the illus tration. Now that would have been

As for the basketball photo (sin gular, thus making it impossible to surround the story) inside: Turner is a public figure because he plays basketball. A basketball picture is

Hopefully when he gets into more advanced journalism classes he will learn more about how art is used.

But perhaps more disturbing to me was this sentence: "It's becom-ing too familiar a scene for people to make assumptions about a per-son's life based on their athletic Carlos Turner is alleged to have stabbed his former girlfriend, and if found guilty he must be held ac-countable for it. What police say he did to Nikki Shrivers demands that.

But he also is alleged to have stubbed himself in the heart—and you mean business if you do that. To discount the impact of a past of such crushing hardship — I feel comfortable in assuming Turner has endured a harder life than Braun can even imagine — is terribly shortsighted.

At age 17 years of age, human beings are very much a product of their environment. Turner's envi-ronment was the perfect breeding ground to create a mentally unbal-anced, violent young man.

His environment is a societal roblem, a problem for all of us. /e need to consider that if we want to keep the Carlos Turner story om repeating itself.

Braun is only a college freshman so he deserves a little latitude and understanding — the same latitude and understanding he is completely unwilling to give 17-year-old Carlos Turner.

UK welcomes prospective students

While Rick Pitino boasts the best class of basketball recruits in the nation, the Admissions Office is teaming up with the SGA to fight another recruiting battle — to attract outstanding academic high school seniors to UK seniors to UK.

One event structured for this is "UK Overnight," which intends to attract prospective students by allowing them to stay the night in a University residence hall and get a life.

"This is a tremendous recruiting advantage," said Antimony Bishop, a journalism sophomore.
"It will give students a chance to see what campus life is really like," said Karen Mikulcik of the Office of Admissions.

He said the bill, which he will sponsor, would change the current selection process by calling for a screening committee to choose can-didates for the leadership posts. The committee would recommend three candidates for each trus-tee or regents vacancy, and the gov-ernor would the choose the board member from this pool.

Currently, the governor has complete discretion to appoint the ma jority of trustees and regents.

Scorsone also proposes a training program for the trustees and regents to keep them abreast of current issues facing state universities.

He plans to introduce the bill in the regular legislative session, which begins in January.

Student senator decries column

The Student Government Association Senate, in its regular Wednesday meeting, addressed the recent controversy surrounding an opinion piece that appeared last week in the Kentucky Kernel.

Senator at Large Ashley Boyd condemned statements made in a column by N. Alan Cornett, Kentucky Kernel editorial editor.

Corneti's comments concerning AIDS were insensitive and beyond her comprehension, Boyd said.

"I think printing the column showed a great lack of journalistic integrity to misinform the University community because sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, are rising drastically," she said she believes it is important that students be in-

She said she believes it is important that students be informed that acquired immune deficiency syndrome can be transmitted from heterosexual, as well as homosexual, activity. One bill that was approved unanimously at the meeting was a measure that allocated $127 to help fund the Black Student Union blanket drive. The money will be used to purchase blankets for the drive. Blankets will be given in memory of Darrell

VanMeter, the UK sophomore who died last week.

The senate also approved a bill requesting $151 to help fund "Circle of Love," a program sponsored by SGA. "Circle of Love" will help provide gifts to underprivileged children. The money will be used to help with expenses for a kick-off reception that will introduce the program to students. gram to students.

The senate also approved a resolution to help protect UK's Robinson Forest, which is located in Knott, Perry and Breathitt ed in Knott, Ferty am Brach-counties.

SGA Vice President Keith Sparks said the resolution was passed to stop destruction of the forest. The resolution was intended to encourage that "the University allow no further corporate mines or anything of that nature to operate in Robinson Forest," Sparks said.

Senator at Large Amy Adams reminded students to avoid walking alone on campus at night because of attacks that however, and that students be aware because or attacks that students be aware because or students be aware because we're so young — like we're immune to common realities," she said.

If you missed the Great American Smokeout or if this was a bad time for you due to exams or other stressors you can call the Cancer Information Service at 1-800-4-CANCER or the American Cancer Society at 253-2822 anytime during the year and receive information about smoking cessation. It can take people several tries at cessation before being successful, but remember if you quit for one day you can quit for a lifetime. Build on any length of cessation time as a success and not as a failure if you return to smoking.

Remember the benefits of quit-ting are immediate: within 20 minutes, blood pressure, skin temperature and pulse rate return to normal; after 8 hours, carbon monoxide returns to normal and oxygen level increases; from 2 weeks to 3 months, circulation improves, stamina and vigor increase and lung function improves. If you cheat, your carbon monoxide reading will reveal it by either increasing or not decreasing.

Information and counseling on smoking cessation is available through the local office of the Kentucky Cancer Information Service at 257-4447 at the Markey Cancer Center. The American Cancer Society sponsors cessation clinics and has information on cessation; for more information call 253-2882. University employees can call the University employees can call the UK WELLNESS Program for information on cessation programs on campus at 257-WELL. cording to an article that appeared in the Kernel the same day as Cornett's column.

In a telephone interview yester-day, Cornett contended that the statements expressed in his column were his personal beliefs and were not intended to be taken as reported facts.

Cornett said he was speaking only of domestic AIDS cases when he wrote that AIDS primarily is a male homosexual disease.

The American College Health Association reports that approximately two-thirds of American AIDS cases are men who have had sex with other men.

The Manchester, Ky., native said he feels he has been portrayed as unsympathetic to AIDS victims. "I feel sorry for anybody who has AIDS," Cornett said. "Nobody deserves to have AIDS."

He compared AIDS victims who

"You can't help but feel sorry for the person, but ... they've got to accept responsibility for the actions that they take," he said.
"People are afraid of it because they don't want to have to change their lifestyle."

"We're holding this meeting to correct his mistakes."
Katie McCormick of the Names Project, an organization designed to pay tribute to AIDS victims, told last night's crowd that acquired immune deficiency syndrome is "a human disease" to which everyone, "the rich and the poor, the young and the old" and even "the American hero" is susceptible.
"This is not white disease or a black disease... a heterosexual disease or a homosexual disease," said

Phyllis Nash of the Albert B. Chan-dler Medical Center. "We need to take this opportunity to offer our support for people who have this disease ... and to educate."

Speakers underlined the need for

"There's only one form of protection against AIDS," Murphy said. "Education."

With dozens of tiny flames flick-ered behind him, Murphy stressed that the burning issue of the night was hope, not hate.

"This is not about revenge ... this is not about blame," he said.

"This is about people dying."

Colleges and universities have had to change the way they do business to meet the needs of those old er students, called "non-traditional students" in the jargon of academic administrators.

"The non-traditional student wants convenience," said Pat Riordan, dean of admissions at George Mason University in Fairfax, Va. "They want to be able to register
