Vaccination now offered for students

By SAILAJA MALEMPATI
Staff Writer

Students who would like to get a jump on the recommended immunization for rubella and measles can do so before the fall semester.

"All they would have to do is come to the Health Services and ask for it," said Frank Cascio, director of the UK Student Health Service.

Outbreaks of the diseases on neighboring campuses have caused the immunization of UK students to become a major concern for University officials.

The two childhood diseases have been affecting a number of young adults during recent years. "During the spring of 1983 there were significant outbreaks of measles at the University of Indiana, Purdue University and Miami University of Ohio. IU was forced to start a mass immunization program, and nearly 20,000 students were immunized," according to Cascio.

"These outbreaks occurred right before spring break. We (University officials) became concerned because students would congregate in Florida and a major epidemic could have resulted," he added.

Last year, major outbreaks were reported at the University of Vermont, Dartmouth College and Cornell University.

A killed vaccine that was used between 1963-1969 is the cause for the sudden epidemics affecting college students, Cascio said. "There may be some college students who have never been immunized," he said. "But even more significant is the number of young adults around the age of 20 who were immunized with a killed vaccine. At that time this vaccine was thought to provide lasting immunity; but it didn't."

After 1969, a live virus was used which does provide lasting immunity, Cascio said.

"What we (Student Health Services) are trying to do is to impress upon students the importance of finding out if they were properly vaccinated," he said. Measles can be a serious disease causing affected students to miss at least two weeks of classes. It can also cause complications such as middle ear infections, pneumonia and encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain.

"The registration process at UK makes it almost impossible to make the vaccine mandatory. All we can do is make an ur-plea to the students," Cascio said. "We don't expect 100 percent participation, but we do hope to get a high enough percentage to protect the University."

"Everyone who pre-registered should have received a copy of a vaccination form with their schedule. We are getting 40-50 forms back each day," he said. The form contains an immunization certificate that should be signed by a physician or health department representative showing that the student was properly vaccinated or that he had a blood test showing immunity to the diseases.

A two week immunization clinic will be held at UK's Student Health Service in the latter part of September. "We're going to make it available to all those students who need immunization," said

Lance Churchill, clinical service coordinator for the Student Health Services. "The vaccine is being supplied by the state Department for Health Services. There will be no charge for the vaccine but there will be a $5 fee for administrative processes."

The vaccine that will be used will protect against both rubella and the measles," Churchill said.

The vaccine should not be administered to anyone with serious allergies to eggs or neomycin, an antibiotic. Anyone affected by cancer, leukemia, lymphoma or any disease that lowers the body's resistance to infection should not take the vaccine. It is also inadvisable for anyone taking cortisone, prednisone or certain anticancer drugs.

Administrative offices split to meet demands

By STEPHANIE WALLNER
Editor-in-Chief

Students both new and old will experience some new conveniences because of the separation of the Office of Admissions and Registrar.

The office is undergoing a split into two offices, one to focus on recruiting and the other to handle records.

Donald Sands, vice chancellor for academic affairs, said the reorganization of the office will meet the University's needs for recruitment brought on by the selective admissions policy.

"For perspective students, they will find that they will be recruited more vigorously," Sands said.

Plans for stricter admissions were approved by the Board of Trustees in June of 1982.

"Selective admissions casts it in stone, but even without that, this is the university in the state where bright students should go," Sands said.

The reorganization of the admissions and registrar has prompted a nationwide search for a director of admissions. Sands said the position will concentrate on "recruiting students and attracting students."

Minimum requirements listed in the job description include "a master's degree and five years of significant experience in admissions."

"Marketing, I think, is a very important part of it. A lot of public relations is involved," he said.

For students who have walked from building to building filing forms, this reorganization will bring many services under one roof.

Sands said the new office of admissions will eventually move to the first floor of the Funkhouser Biological Sciences Building along with student financial aid and housing.

No date has been set for the relocation. Since admissions will be moving out, the Office of the Registrar will be filling the extra space in the Gillis Building, where it is currently housed.

Plans to hire a director for the office of the registrar have not been finalized. "We haven't decided what we are going to do on that position," Sands said.

"Our intention was that (Elbert) Ockerman (currently director of the Office of admissions and registrar) would take that position."

Fourth of July celebrations planned in downtown area

By SACHA DEVROOMEN
Senior Staff Writer

For the first time ever, fireworks will be displayed in downtown Lexington on the Fourth of July. The fireworks, however, are only a small part of the festivities planned for this July Festival.

This year's celebration will be bigger than years before. "Last year we just had things happening on the Fourth," said Mary Wathen, an administrative aide to the mayor and a member of the festival commission. "There will be a whole week of activities this year."

There are more activities this year than before because the Fourth of July does not fall on a weekend, and many people will be staying home. "Because people will not be traveling, we want to give citizens more downtown, more free activities," Wathen said. All activities will be centered around the downtown area.

Lexington's July Festival will begin on Saturday June 30 with the Farmer's Market on Vine Street, a place for farmers to bring their produce to sell. Court Day, which will feature vendors with arts and crafts, antiques, glassware and brass and the Country Fair, which will include amateur competitions in several categories, also will be held on Saturday on Vine street.

A fireworks show will be displayed on Saturday night immediately following the first Kentucky-Tennessee all-star football game at Commonwealth Stadium at 7:30. The 31st annual firework show is sponsored by the Lexington Kiwanis Club.

Activities on the Fourth of July start downtown at 8 a.m. with the 6.2 mile road race, the Bluegrass 10,000. Also featured throughout the day will be the Arts and Craft Fair and the International Food Fair on Vine street.

A Fourth of July Parade will be held from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. on Main and Vine streets.

The fireworks will begin at dark Wednesday at Kincaid Towers. The show is sponsored by Jerry's restaurant and WKYT-TV and will be designed by the Lexington Kiwanis Club.

Those who choose to display their own fireworks should be aware of the laws that limit people buying and setting off fireworks at their homes. According to state laws, the state Fire Marshall shall control all fireworks in the state.

In Kentucky, people can only buy class C fireworks which include such things as sparklers, smoke snakes and fire crackers, according to Bob Works, Battalion Chief of the Lexington Fayette Urban County Fire Department. These products should be marked class C with the fire marshal's number on it.

"Anything else is illegal unless it is made by a pyrotechnician with a permit from the government," Works said.

Works said he expects some fireworks to be brought into Lexington. People who violate the Kentucky laws can be subject to a fine of up to $1,000 or up to 30 days in jail, or both.

Any fireworks display should be performed with caution, Works said. No small children should use fireworks without parental supervision. "The most common injuries are children who suffered burns." He added that sparklers are especially dangerous because they stay hot after they have gone out.

He said that the statistics are staggering on how many people have been injured from fireworks. "In 1981, 11,400 people were injured as a result of fireworks. Accidents occur from misuse and unsupervised use. Deaths do occur."

Kentucky boys sweep Indiana All-Stars, 84-81

By KEN DYKE
Sports Editor

The Kentucky All-Star boys basketball team made it a sweep over their Indiana counterparts with an 84-81 win before a packed house of 17,085 at Market Square Arena in Indianapolis. The sweep was the first for Kentucky since 1979.

The win came despite some of the Kentucky players losing their game jerseys. Before the game, several of the jerseys were stolen from the hotel where the players were staying, forcing those players to use practice shirts for the game.

The Kentucky boys did it the same way in the second game as they did in the first: strength inside and too much Jeff Blandon.

Kentucky, much taller and more physical inside, used that strength again to dominate Indiana. Kentucky grabbed 44 rebounds, including 12 from Fred Tisdale and 10 from Keith Jordan, compared to just 37 from the Hoosier squad.

Blandon, who received only two votes from the coaches around the Commonwealth, proved again to be a valuable selection as he led all scorers with 23 points from his point guard position. Blandon's two game total of 52 points led all scorers, including Indiana's two All-Americans, Delray Brooks and Troy Lewis. Lewis led the Indiana squad in the second game with 21 points.

The first half started and ended with Indiana dominating play. Indiana led throughout the half and went into the locker room with a 48-39 halftime lead. That lead ballooned to 52-41 early in the second half, when Kentucky started to make its game-winning run.

Kentucky reeled off the next six straight points to make it 52-47. After trading baskets, Kentucky reeled off the next seven straight points to take its first lead of 61-59 with 9:20 remaining.

Indiana refused to quit and scored the next two baskets. The two teams then swapped the lead until the Kentucky squad took the lead for good at 78-77 when Blandon hit two free throws with 1:51 left.

Tisdale, who scored 19 points, hit a turnaround jumper to pad the lead at 80-77. Indiana's Lewis hit a 19-foot jumper of his own when things got interesting at the finish.

Blandon hit two more free throws with 25 seconds left. Then Scott Haffner, who had only six points for the game, hit a long jumper to make it 82-81 with 18 seconds left. Kentucky then used three tries to get the ball inbounds, with Indiana players scrambling to prevent it, before Tisdale was fouled with nine seconds left in the game. Tisdale toed the line, and sank both free throws to seal the win.

Lowe misses Olympic qualifier

By CELESTE R. PHILLIPS
Reporter

Tonya Lowe, the sole representative of UK's womens track team at the Olympic trials, failed to make it to the final qualifying heat. Lowe finished sixth in the second heat at the trials held last weekend.

The Flint, Mich. native ran in a time of 13.56 seconds. Ironically, the same time was the fourth place qualifying time in the first heat of the same event.

Lowe, a senior on UK womens track team this past season, had to place fourth or better in her respective heat to make it to the finals.

Lowe, who was the indoor and outdoor 100-meter hurdles champion in the SEC, was in the same heat with the eventual first- and second-place winners in the event. Although her heat was the toughest, Lowe preferred the one she was in.

"I would have rather run in the second heat because it was a loaded heat," Lowe said. "I would have placed higher if I had made it to the finals."

Lowe attributes part of her sixth place finish to a bad start. "I got out of the blocks really slow."

Although she is uncommitted, Lowe has been invited to run in Canada for the summer.

'The Search for Spock' recaptures legendary charm

"The Search for Spock" was not so much a search as it was a quest. The third of the Star Trek movies, "Search" brings out the warmth of the famed Enterprise crew and allows them to have an adventure just like the old days.

Only they cannot recapture the old days. It is genuine relief to see that the makers of this film have come to terms with that.

"Star Trek III" is true to the Star Trek tradition; it is innovative, daring and honest. The first movie was clearly too spectacular and flashy, which was proven by the response to the second film, "The Wrath of Khan." Veteran trekkies loved "Kahn" because it made the characters more important than the technicolor, and "Search" proves that the movie-makers learned their lesson well.

Leonard Nimoy directs the movie with an easygoing charm. These are indeed the same Sam, the same Scotty and McCoy that we knew so long ago. But they are older and they do not try to hide it. The Enterprise, like them, has also become outmoded and will not be repaired after its battle with Kahn. This movie, which focuses on the attempted rebirth of Spock, is really a rebirth for the entire Star Trek legend.

William Shatner is his own, undeniable James T. Kirk. Shatner's expeditions through prime time TV have been many and varied since the career-making Captain Kirk, and it is clear that Kirk is still his best role.

DeForest Kelly is perhaps the most engaging character in this chapter of the story, and "Bone" McCoy is as cranky and charming as he ever was.

George Takei is there with James Doohan and the rest. The special effects that surround them are complementary instead of oppressive and — as in "Kahn" — the story is the important thing. It's just "the boys" out in space having their adventure.

"Search" is indeed a cult movie, inevitably more fun for fans of the TV series than for the uninformed viewer. But it is a well-made movie and a strongly directed one. It is an enjoyable adventure for any viewer.

For the average trekkie it is just plain fun.

KERNEL RATING: 8

"Star Trek III: The Search for Spock" is playing at Northpark and Southpark Cinemas. Rated PG.

'Pope' scores with rage, music

Near the climax of "The Pope of Greenwich Village," the soon-to-be mutilated Paulie (Eric Roberts) gets some shaky consolation from an uncle: "Nothing ever hurts as much as you think it will." That pretty well sums up this film's attitude about life and luck.

Paulie is a two-bit young dreamer who refuses to grow up. His cousin Charlie (Mickey Rourke of "Diner" fame) is a nattily-attired losing hustler who is never more than a step ahead of his cousin. Neither can resist the temptation to make "the big score" — in this case, a robbery. The difference, for what it's worth, is that Charlie wants to use the money to make himself an honest person at last.

Both are two proud Italians with vague dreams and a sense of family loyalty that more often than not brings them nothing but grief.

When Paulie's petty theft gets them fired from their restaurant job, Charlie's wife, Diane — played carelessly by Daryl Hannah — wonders when he'll outgrow his loser cousin. "Maybe that's what WASP's do," Charlie says. "Italians outgrow clothes, not people."

Family honor notwithstanding, these Italians do betray each other occasionally, though they are quick to forgive all transgressions.

The beauty of this film, however, lies precisely in this exploration of the lengths to which people will go to pretend they have their lives in order.

Rourke and Roberts give one of the finest portrayals of family ties since Robert Duvall and Robert De Niro in "True Confessions." The performance is all the more ironic since Charlie and Paulie are only third cousins who try as desperately to maintain the charade of family loyalty as they do to make the big score.

Roberts consistently sounds more Jewish than Italian, but otherwise turns in an excellent performance.

Rourke gets second billing to Roberts here, but "The Pope" is definitely his show. Diane perfectly describes his quirky character when she cries, "Why are you always just one inch away from being a good person?"

Hannah is more than an inch away from a good performance in this film. Her main purpose is looking terrific in her aerobic outfit and provoking Rourke into fits of barely-contained rage.

"The Pope of Greenwich Village" is nonetheless several cuts above standard summer film fare, supported by some of the current season's finest comic relief and a solid soundtrack from Dave Grusin and Mink DeVille. The repetition of Frank Sinatra's "Summer Wind" poignantly underscores the cousins' attempted carefree attitude.

For all its depiction of city slime, "The Pope" never lapses into a mere sociological study. Director Stuart Rosenberg even includes one highly romanticized parking-lot stickball scene in which the players move to the soundtrack music.

This "Pope" may not be perfect, but it turns life's cheap sins into a satisfying show.

KERNEL RATING: 6

"The Pope of Greenwich Village" is playing at Southpark Cinemas. Rated R for profanity.

Around the arts, briefly

"The Importance of Being Earnest," Oscar Wilde's brilliant sketch of 19th-century naughty nonsense and social satire, opens at 8 tonight in the Guignol Theater.

The play is noted for its acerbic wit and delightfully farcical characterizations. The cast is comprised of veteran local actors and UK graduates.

"The Importance of Being Earnest" will be performed at 8 tonight, tomorrow and Saturday, and July 5, 6 and 7. Tickets are $5. For reservations, call 257-3297.

The Kentucky Theater is offering a Fourth of July potpourri of cinematic Americana through next Wednesday. While perusing the holiday festivities downtown, you might enjoy such classics as Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Oklahoma" (which is infinitely more enjoyable on the big screen); Jimmy Stewart's portrait of American honesty in "Mr. Smith goes to Washington"; concert footage of Willie Nelson's annual "Fourth of July Picnic;" William Holden and Rosalind Russell in "Picnic;" Sissy Spacek's moving performance and scenes of southeastern Kentucky in "Coal Miner's Daughter;" and a special Wednesday morning showing of "The Golden Voyage of Sinbad."

Show times were not set at press time, but will be available in local movie listings. All films except "Sinbad" will be shown more than once during the holiday weekend, and the new Kentucky calendars will be available tomorrow.

Local television viewers get a cultural shot in the arm at 10 p.m. July 3, when KET presents Jean Shepherd's comic teleplay, "The Great American Fourth of July and Other Disasters." A master of hilarious hyperbole, Shepherd takes a sometimes sentimental but always funny trip through his — and our — childhood recollections of neighborhood craziness.

Ockerman has accepted a job in Washington, D.C. and will leave UK some time in August.

The Office of the Registrar will handle registration and record-keeping functions. Sands said if further resources are available, computerization of all student records will be a priority.

"This would provide much better service for students," in registration, he said. "It's a massive job to get everything computerized."

He anticipates only a small amount of advancement toward computerization in the coming year.

Space program is scientific work which merits aid

Advancements in science rarely come without cost. Sometimes the cost is in dollars, but sometimes it is in lives. This week the lives were spared, but the space shuttle Discovery won't be seeking any strange new worlds for a while.

After a valve failure in the first engine aborted the ship's takeoff with four seconds left in the countdown, it was unknown when the shuttle could be given a new launch date.

But it is very important that it does get one.

This is not the first time Cape Canaveral's control rooms have met with trouble from their flying machines, but only one other American-manned spaceship has aborted its flight so close to liftoff. Yet it is a testimony to the precision of the shuttle's systems that the failure was detected and a terrible disaster averted.

This time all six crew members were unharmed. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has not always been so lucky.

Even so, the miraculous technological advancements that have attended the work in space, far outweigh the sheer danger of the airless void. It is often argued that research should be slowed and controlled — not due to a lack of funding but rather because of a fear that new discoveries will not be used for good.

History has proven that this fear is not necessarily invalid. In fact, it often seems the most powerful new discoveries in science are often used for ill.

And beyond the fear of misusing science, what about the very real concern of accidental abuse? Consider the recent case of the wealthy Elsa Rios, who died with her husband in a plane crash last year. She had no will, but she did have two frozen embryos stored at the in vitro fertilization center of the Queen Victoria Medical Center in Melbourne, Australia.

Many argue that the embryos have not only the right to life, but also the right to the Rios inheritance. Volunteers for surrogate mothers have already come forth.

In this case, science has painted itself into a corner and long legislative sessions will be the result. In the interest of improving the quality of life, in vitro technology inevitably raises moral, ethical and legal issues.

And what of less obvious misuse? This is difficult to say.

Not so with the space program.

NASA merits more support from our federal government than they have seen in the past. President Ronald Reagan's new dedication to a "Star Wars" defense plan may be more military than necessary, but at least it will allocate more funding to release man from his Earthly bounds.

Along with the defense, there will inevitably be discoveries. But they probably won't be cheap.

Before we go where no man has gone before, we will have to pay the fare.

A worthwhile cost; to go where no man has gone before

Walt Gries

Love or leave this land of the free

Priorities.

I have had it with pro-military boozes rubbing their necks and telling me I am a commie because I favor survival to extremes. I have been told for the last time that I can move somewhere else if I don't like things here.

Just because certain people have value systems that support things like paying $100 for a 50-cent spare part or buying a tank that the maker won't guarantee for the first 24 hours, doesn't mean I have to take part in it. I don't have to believe that their's is the American way.

A wise old man once said "Look, Kid, society's priorities are all screwed up. You know what the most overrated experience in life is? First sex. And the most underrated? An uncomplicated bowel movement. What ya gonna do with a world like that? Open a theme park?"

I said he was wise, not tactful. God bless America. We have achieved a state of civilization that our ancestors could not have anticipated.

We have become great. It is no small accomplishment to divide our shortened attention spans between a Michael Jackson concert, a "Star Wars" defense plan and Indiana Jones. We are even more impressive when it comes to individuality. This is the nation that gave the world baseball and Charles Manson.

But our greatness is our freedom. It is one thing to be graced with a performance by a musical group. It is another thing entirely to be allowed to make noise when the performance is canceled.

Americans get irritated when they're treated unfairly. Citizens of the Soviet Union may seem humorless, but they are used to waiting in long lines and they are relieved by short ones. Americans who grow angry when waiting in a long line should watch a clock. The "half hour" wait may really be more like 10 minutes.

Capitalism may be responsible for many evils and corruption, but free enterprise does a lot for the consumer. It is sad that the desire for wealth at any cost can encourage business to forsake the environment or the well-being of certain citizens, but no one would deny the obvious advantages of having a dozen supermarkets within a few miles of each other.

In short, capitalism isn't all bad. Or all good.

The Kernel has been accused of being overly liberal in the past, but the reality is that the paper changes its complexion with each new semester and year. While editorials may oppose the policies of our University, state or nation, the editorial decisions are made in the same manner as any newspaper might make them.

If we don't like someone's policies, we say so. We don't select a viewpoint because it is particularly radical or because it is extremely popular. Columnists and editors on this paper say what they want to.

Nobody tells us when to shut up. Except, of course, our lawyers. So to those who believe America is not free, or that our country's commitment to the rights of the individual is not important or even that all "hippie leftist propaganda" should be outlawed, there is only one thing to say.

This is America, land of the free. Love it or leave it, comrade.

History sophomore dies after beating

Bradley F. Smith was described as a "loner" and an "aloof individual" by those who knew him.

Smith, 27, died early last Thursday at the Intensive Care Unit of the Medical Center. He was allegedly beaten last Saturday by Samuel L. Winburn, a tenant in the building on South Limestone St. where Smith was manager.

According to Rolan Taylor, deputy Fayette County coroner, Smith died of "multiple, blunt-force injuries to the head, trunk and extremities."

Smith was a history sophomore and had been enrolled at UK since the spring of 1983. He attended classes last semester but was not enrolled during either of the summer sessions.

Barbara Mabry, director of special programs and advising for Arts & Sciences, had frequent meetings with Smith during his time at UK. She had helped him with scheduling and had counseled him in choosing a major.

Smith appeared to be very "troubled," Mabry said, and was unwilling to let the faculty help him. "That's what frustrated all of us. We could never find the right combination to help him," she said. "There were people ready, willing and trying."

"Most students grow to trust me and we can develop a relationship that is beneficial to both of us but you never could do that with Brad," she said.

Mabry said Smith spent much of his time at the University, especially in the history department. He often arrived at the office before 8 a.m., waiting for someone to open the door, she said.

"What time he wasn't at the University, he was walking. He walked everywhere," she said.

Mabry said she often saw Smith walking across town, sometimes very early in the morning or late at night. "He was always so alone."

Douglas Wilson, an associate dean of students, came in contact with Smith when he registered vacancies in his apartment building with the off-campus housing office.

Although Wilson didn't know him well, he said Smith was not like the average student because of his age. "He wasn't the 'Joe College' type. He wasn't into student activities — fraternities and sororities for example."

Selective admissions policy prompts change; LCC becomes UK's 13th community college

By CINDY PALORMO
Staff Writer

On July 1, Lexington Technical Institute will officially become Lexington Community College.

LCC will be the thirteenth community college in UK's system. The change is the result of selective admissions to the Lexington campus of UK. "With selective admissions, some students are left without access to higher education because they cannot enter UK," said Charles Wethington, chancellor to the Community College System. "Students who were not accepted but hope to transfer to a four-year institution can attend LCC."

Sharon Jaggard, who will become director of LCC on July 1, said that more programs will be offered as a result of the change. "We are expanding to comprehensive community college status."

However, there will be no direct changes as a result of becoming a community college, Wethington said.

Whereas LTI had been primarily a technical institution, general education courses will now be offered as well. "We are adding a new two-year transfer program to the existing 15 programs. This program will offer an associate degree of arts or an associate degree of sciences," Jaggard said.

LTI has been a part of the UK system since 1965. The community college system began in 1964.

Students attending LCC will pay the same tuition as students attending the Lexington campus. They will be under the same UK student codes, excluding academics.

While LCC is designed to serve commuting students, accommodations will be made for students who need to live on campus, Wethington said. "We allow people in the Bluegrass area to get a two-year degree close to home," Jaggard said.

Students attending LCC will also have the opportunity to become involved with programs offered on the main campus.

Wethington said some of the programs offered at LCC, especially those in health related fields, will be selective in admissions. Statewide programs in nursing are selective at all the community colleges.

LCC has many selected programs, Wethington said, because many programs are only offered at LCC and not at other community colleges.

This is because some programs offered at LCC are not offered at other UK community colleges or the main campus.

The projected enrollment for 1984-85 is 2500 students. Only 200-300 students will be transfer students, while the rest are in technical occupations fields.

"Lexington is a growing city and with our technical program, students can take advantage of better coordinate operations," Jaggard said.

Wethington said the need to serve Lexington with a community college has been there for some time.

"The heart of Lexington Community College has been and will continue to be in technical occupations," he said. "That's the strength of the LCC program."

Video games draw less income as popularity decreases

By CINDY PALORMO
Staff Writer

Flashing lights, bleeping noises, and endless mazes . . . video games in motion.

These features make a lot of money for the University and take up a lot of hours for students and staff alike.

For 25 cents, you can try your luck at beating those mind-boggling, finger-itching games. Students who need to satisfy their need for such therapy can find some of the most popular games at the Student Center Video Game Room. There are 12 games during the summer and up to 21 during the fall.

The Student Center leases the video games and gets a percentage on the gross sales, according to Mark Pritchett, assistant director of the Student Center.

"The current income has drastically fallen off," Pritchett said. "Last year, we made about $35,000 from all the games."

The intake is down 25-30 percent per machine, he said. About one and one-half years ago, the video game revenue peaked here.

"We anticipated the decline before it began," Pritchett said. "Changes over the last two and a half years have brought about the decline. The challenge is dying fairly rapidly and the games are more impulsive."

The trends are extremely unpredictable, Tony Wash, owner of Tony's Arcade, said. "The slow down and decline is actually to a more realistic stage," Wash said. "The peak was higher than ever expected. In the beginning, nobody could walk by without playing."

Pritchett also said that people will not travel to play the games. With the availability of home game systems, there is little need to 'hang out' at the local video arcade.

There also are not a lot of new kinds of games being designed. While many new games on the market are laser machines, Pritchett said he never really became interested in offering them because of the degrees of difficulty and repetitiveness.

For the past two and one-half years, Galaga, Centipede, and Ms. Pac-Man have been the most popular games in the Student Center, Pritchett said.

Galaga averages about 435 plays per week, while students attempt to beat Centipede 410 times per week. And 382 times a week Ms. Pac-Man is put to the test.

While the types of games available depend mainly on the vending companies, Pritchett said he also takes suggestions from the students. "We consider their requests when choosing games."

Currently UK has the contract for video games with Tony's Arcade. Tony's provides the games and the maintenance. "There was a big turning point in the market and the University provided a stable place. There is a greater chance of survival in such an atmosphere," Wash said.

The Student Center draws most of its video fanatics between 10:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. The rush is because of lunch, Pritchett said. The weekends are slow though because people rarely come just to play video games.

Pritchett said he is doubtful any expansion will be done to bring more games because business is down. "The business has reached its peak but is going down because people are interested in records, movies and home games."

Also decreasing are the cases of Space Invader wrist and Pac Man fever. Down also are the number of people staring at screens for hours attempting to beat video game records. Like that first play on that last quarter, one generation of video games has past while another generation is coming.
