Progress

W tion of registration for the first se school, and the estab lishment of a new all-time high enrollment, the University of Kentucky continues its progress in the educational field. It was not so many years back that the University existed but for few stu dents. The larger enrollment measures its progress and true tribute must be paid to the mer responsible for this progress.

President McVey, one of the foremost educa-tors in the country, deserves just praise for the part he played in the University's evolution. The Summer Session Director, Dr. Jesse Adams, too merits just praise, for the faculty during this Summer Session is second to none in the South.

In view of this progress, strange does it seem that the University receives such limited ap-propriations from the state. It depends entirely propriations from the state. It depends entirely on the state appropriations for its existence, and truly it is progressing not because of, but in spite of these appropriations which limit it in its work and hinder its further progress.

University students comprise a good part of the voters of the state. They realize that economy, while it must be practiced, must be prac-ticed with caution when it applies to the premier educational institution in the state.

It is with earnest desire for continued programmer. ress that The Kernel suggests that the students as voters, take it upon themselves to see that the necessary money be given the University to con tinue its growth toward an unrivaled Univer-sity in the United States.

This Campus That World

N or since last summer have we attempted to write a column for the paper, but a year has made no difference, like the typical college rnalist our inhibited desire has remained with us, and again we sit down at the machine and make another attempt.

It really is interesting to look back, even back one year, and see what a change has occurred in opinions and style of writing. When we looked back we were shocked at what we had written last year. And now we are quite sure that when and if we look back on this writing a year from ow, we will be just as shocked.

But we have the advantage in that we know are neither a Brisbane nor a Winchell, although perhaps we would like to be able to write copy as well as they. What we can't un-derstand is why college journalists have apparently obtained such uncomplimentary reputations throughout the newspaper world. quite certain that when we seek a job, we won't expect to begin as editor of a metropolitan daily In fact, we will be willing to begin as copy boy.

It occurs to us that the profession of journal-ism itself has never quite seriously been accepted Anyone can be a reporter, has been the attitude.

Correspondence schools have issued paper diplomas to thousands, making them believe that they were journalists. And it is this crop, we believe, that has created such a reputation.

We are pained somewhat at this attitude of editors throughout the country. For after all, when one has devoted four years to the study of one subject, he at least is able to grasp the knacl of writing a lead properly, and certainly can write a news story.

Constantly we are told "no editorial com ment; lower case style; make it concise; etc." In fact we are perhaps made too conservative for duty on some papers. Yet we take all that into consideration and are willing to start all over again - having still a fair foundation to learn ewspaper work anew. Still a college man i handicapped - just because of the fact that he has graduated from, or attended a University.

Another thing that has played an importan Another thing that has played an important role is the movies. No doubt it has caused many to be falsely influenced by portrayals of a gay carefree life. In fact it is obvious when one considers how many sign up for journalism courses to the life of the course of the college. at college, many of whom are not qualified to be copy boys.

Yes, it hurts our pride, and yet, despite our self-realization, we too, will be classed as a col lege boy who thinks he knows everything.

University broadcasters, and the rest of you will undoubtedly find many of the summer programs of interest.

The College of Agriculture programs, heard at 12:15 each day, with the exception of Saturdays and Sundays, are conducted regularly by L. C. Brewer, and feature talks by experts on the various phases of farm activity. The 1:15 programs feature many of the musical artists of the University in entertaining broadcasts, and these are followed at 1:30 by programs designed to be of educational value.

Wednesdays, the studios present on the 1:15 programs designed to be of educational value.

Wednesdays, the studios present on the 1:16 program, two nimble-fingered keyboard artists, Alice Robertson and Susan Sweeney, in a quarter hour of piano selections featuring classical renditions. At 1:30, Dr. J. S. Chambers, head of the department of hygiene and public health, directs a timely program on "Safeguarding Kentucky Health."

The 1:15 broadcast on Thursdays features the University's outstanding soprano soloist, Mary Louise McKenna, whose distinguished singing during her radio career has brought her to the attention of several leading critics who prophesy a brilliant future for the Kentucky coed. At 1:30, Ruth Haines, instructor in Public School Art, discusses "At your leisure time, what?"

Fridays offer a "double bill" that should not be missed. At 1:15 Bill Cross and his orchestra take over the air waves for a quarter hour of dance music that is becoming increasingly popular. Dance addicts will appreciate the smooth swing featured by the local maestro, and the vocal interpretations of Bobby Campbell. At 1:30 Prof. Neil Plummer of the department of journalism, presents his column of the six "What's News in Kentucky?" consisting of unusual items of interest collected from the various papers of the state.

All of those interested in witnessing the broadcasts are cordially invited to visit the studios, located in the Art Center on Euclia Avenue, at any time.

Journalism Schools Report Draws Attention to Southern Newspapers

The Kernel's Special Service
LEXINOTON, VA.—Greater effort in directing public attention to the relations of the American newspaper with law, government, and business is urged in the annual report of the Lee School of Journalism, at Washington and Lee University here, to the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association.

Misunderstandings as to the functions and services of the newspaper underlie the suggestion in the report written by O. W. Riegel, director of the Lee School, and submitted to Henry P. Johnston, of the Birmingham News and Agelerald and chairman of the Lee School of Journalism committee of the S. N. P. A.

Citing the presidential campaign of 1936, Professor Riegel noted that "the charge that the newspaper press misrepresented the political sentiment of its public and distorted the Issues was especially false as concerns the press of the South, which, in its totality, exhibited impartially in its news columns."

Criticisms of this character, Professor Riegel said, seemed to call for impartial investigative studies of the actual performance of the press, especially in its relations with government, business, law, and Grades usually come from the instruction staff but now students in the colleges of medicine and last choic State University are marking their instructors and professors. They are free to express their opinions of faculty members by answering questions designed for the purpose.

President Robert Maynard Hutchins of the University of Chicago can smile now when he recalls the harsh criticism of his "come if you like" system of class attendance, inaugurated in 1931. Objectors declared that optional attendance, with its major provision that a student be allowed to progress through the university as fast as the ability would permit, would result in professors having to give monologues in echoing lecture halls. But instead of cutting to see a movie or catch up on sleep, the majority are attending classes comstantly. University officials state President Robert Maynard Hutch sistently. University officials state that instruction has taken on new life. Attendance is just as high in the days of penalty hours.

A new radio listening center will be established next week by the University of Kentucky in northern Knott County, it was announced yesterday. The new center will be located at Einrock post office. Einrock is on Laurel fork of Quicksand Creek only a few miles from the head. The operator of the center will be William Compton, store owner and steam miller. The radio set will be placed in his general store, where the radio programs will be available to all who may wish to come in and listen. The center at Einrock is the fifth that the University of Kentucky has located in Knott County, other centers being at Bolyn on Rock Fork, of Braver Creek; Vest, on Ball's Fork of Troublesome: Pip-papass on Caney Creek, and Cordia, on Lot's Creek.
