Committee releases details of selective admissions plan

By JAMES EDWIN HARRIS
Managing Editor

High school seniors who are shopping for a college to attend next fall may be advised to put the following on their lists when they visit UK:

- A high school grade point average of at least 2.5;
- An American College Test score of 15 or better; and
- A completed application for enrollment submitted by February 15.

A University Senate committee yesterday gave the Senate Council that and more information during a status report of progress in setting guidelines for the University's new selective admissions policy.

The report, presented by Robert Altenkirch, chairman of the senate's Committee on Admissions and Academic Standards, is "not a final or action item," and is "highly speculative," according to Donald Ivey, council chairman.

It does not include admissions guidelines for transfer students, Altenkirch said, nor does it address the question of exceptional students whose credentials fall far below those guidelines.

Nonetheless, it gives prospective UK freshmen a glance at the criteria they may be required to adhere to if they wish to study here in 1983's Fall semester. It also gives them a new calendar to follow when applying for admission.

The proposal, Altenkirch said, is designed to limit the number of unqualified students who eventually attend UK.

Its core is a three-part "threshold," based on statistics provided by ACT officials and several past freshman classes, that would guarantee immediate acceptance to all UK applicants who can match or surpass the requirements.

Seniors whose high school grade point averages are 3.5 or above, and whose ACT scores are above 15, would be accepted immediately at UK, as would students whose GPA's are between 3.0 and 3.5 and whose ACT scores are 17 or above.

Seniors with a 2.5 GPA and a score of at least 19 on the ACT also would be guaranteed admission.

Applicants whose GPA's are 2.0 or lower, and whose ACT scores are 10 or lower, would be rejected immediately.

The remaining applicants would be lumped together in an applicant pool, with acceptance going only to a certain percentage of the best prospects. Several council members expressed a range of concerns, however, when they learned the proposed standards could reduce dramatically the size of the 1983 freshman class.

More than 14,800 high school seniors from the class of 1981 indicated on their ACT forms a wish to attend UK, Altenkirch said. Of that number, 5,076 students would have been immediately accepted via the threshold. Of the more than 6,000 of the 14,800 who picked UK as their first choice, 3,750 would have been immediately accepted, Altenkirch said.

But of that 3,750, 1,809 students, or 48 percent, actually registered for the 1981 Fall semester, a statistic Altenkirch called "poor."

"Where did the others go?" Altenkirch asked. "I don't know."

Ten percent of the desired class size, or 201 students, would have been admitted from an applicant pool of 1,286, forming a 1981 freshman class of 2,010 students.

In contrast, 3,251 students entered UK as freshmen in the fall of 1981, a rise of 1,241 students, Altenkirch said those students came from unacceptable or pool applicants.

Constance Wilson, an ex-officio council member, challenged Altenkirch's 10 percent pool ceiling, and J. Tim Hays, an ex-officio council member, challenged the number of students asked how Altenkirch planned to obtain enough students to create a manageable freshman class.

Altenkirch responded by proposing to raise the percentage of pool applicants to 30 percent in 1983, with reductions over the next four years to a final level of 10 percent. Such a rise would increase the theoretical 1981 class to 2,694 members, or 674.

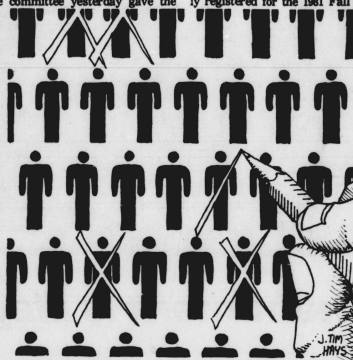

He also suggested the University improve its recruitment efforts to bring more students who would be immediately acceptable.

Such an effort, he said, conceivably would have brought 674 students into the theoretical freshman class, thereby canceling the need to dip into the pool for more students.

His statement was echoed by Art Gallaher, chancellor for the main campus, who said, "Unless we have an aggressive recruitment program, you're dead in the water."

Gallaher said the University would be forced to locate the funds necessary to build such a program.

Altenkirch also said the number of immediately acceptable students who become freshmen could rise after a statewide implementation of pre-college curricula along with an enhancement of UK's reputation as a result of the selective admissions policy.

Reagan urges Israel to transfer West Bank

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

BURBANK, Calif. — President Reagan said last night that Israel should yield the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip to Palestinian self-government under Jordanian authority as part of a "fresh start" formula for "a durable, just and lasting peace" in the Middle East.

Reagan said the Palestinians who live in those occupied areas should govern themselves "in association with Jordan," not in an independent state. He offered no blueprint for that association.

Seeking "an exchange of territories for peace," Reagan said he was abandoning the role of mediator to outline American proposals. He said the United States will not support any additional Jewish settlement in the West Bank and Gaza, adding that "a settlement freeze by Israel" would enhance peace prospects.

He said Jerusalem, also held by Israel since 1967, "must remain undivided," its status to be negotiated. Reagan said the American commitment to Israeli security "is ironclad," but his proposal faced virtually certain rejection by the government of Menachem Begin.

"The United States will stand by these principles with total dedication," Reagan said in a nationally televised address arranged after Israeli Radio broadcast an outline of the proposals.

Reagan said, "The United States will not support the establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and we will not support annexation or permanent control by Israel."

His remarks came hours after the last PLO fighters evacuated Beirut, and Reagan urged all parties "to move quickly to build upon this achievement." The president said the 800 U.S. Marines overseeing the evacuation should be out of Lebanon within two weeks.

"With the agreement in Lebanon," Reagan said, "we have an opportunity for a more far-reaching peace effort in the region, and I am determined to seize that moment. He said administration officials had conferred with Israel, Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

"So tonight I am calling for a fresh start," Reagan said. "This is the moment for all those directly concerned to get involved — or lend their support — to a workable basis for peace."

"Self-government ... in association with Jordan offers the best chance for a durable, just and lasting peace," he said.

The president interrupted his vacation and flew to Burbank to make a nationwide broadcast.

Reagan said, "We have embraced

Administration weakens pipeline penalty

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration made clear yesterday it intends to scale back penalties against European companies using U.S. technology to construct the Soviet natural gas pipeline.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told reporters the administration intends only to prevent the firms from receiving exports of U.S. oil and gas equipment and technology, not all U.S. exports.

That would relax the total export ban imposed by the Commerce Department last week against Dresser-France, the subsidiary of Dallas-based Dresser Industries, and another French company, Creusot-Loire, for shipping pipeline compressors to the Soviets.

Last week's order banning the firms from receiving any U.S. goods "may need a little redefinition ... a clarification of what was meant," Regan said.

He said the stringent order "was, perhaps, misinterpreted or, perhaps, in its original, pristine form, was a little too sweeping without giving a precise definition of what was meant."

U.S. budget grows larger than estimate

WASHINGTON — The Congressional Budget Office issued a slightly higher forecast for the 1983 budget deficit yesterday, predicting red ink will reach a record $155 billion despite expectations of lower interest rates.

The prediction is in sharp contrast to the Reagan administration's official estimate of $115 billion and the $104 billion contained in the budget plan Congress approved in June.

Budget Director David A. Stockman and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan have conceded previously that the administration's official 1983 forecast, based on relatively optimistic assumptions about an economic recovery, could easily prove too low.

And, a government report said yesterday that economic figures give "mixed signals" on whether a recovery from recession is under way, while the newest bankruptcy tally showed that business failures jumped last week to a 50-year peak.

On Wall Street, the stock market turned lower on heavy volume as interest rates rose.

The budget office said red ink for the current budget year, which ends Sept. 30, will be $112 billion. It also forecast deficits of $152 billion in 1984 and again in 1985, disputing statements by the Reagan administration and congressional GOP leaders that tax increases and spending cuts approved in Congress last month will produce steadily declining deficits in the future.

Fire starts in missile silo

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — A fire that broke out next to an underground Minuteman III missile silo started when insulation around a vent ignited in an above-ground utility room, the Air Force says.

The military called the local civilian fire department, but the firefighters said the blaze had been put out by airmen by the time they got there.

The Air Force said the Tuesday afternoon fire did not pose a danger to the nuclear warheads on the missile. The silo is about 20 miles north of the town of Sterling in north-eastern Colorado and is operated by Warren Air Force Base here, which controls 200 Minuteman III missiles in Colorado, Wyoming and Nebraska.

Sterling Fire Department Chief Engineer Gerald Acre said the fire broke out in the exhaust vent of a utility room that houses the silo's power generator and "two of their people had smothered the fire and had it under control" when firefighters arrived.

"The only damage is to the exhaust-vent insulation," an air base spokesman said.

A citizens' draft for both sexes is needed

The crackdown on draft registration resisters has begun, and as Jerry Reed would say "it's seryus bizness."

Already, the government has won judgments against two men who refused to register, and it's likely more are forthcoming. Furthermore, any move by the right-wing Burger Court to determine the constitutionality of registration would be the shock of the century. Draft registration is here to stay, folks — at least for the remaining one-and-one-half years of the Reagan administration (and despite the president's campaign promises to the contrary).

Those who have legitimately stood their ground, refusing to register in the face of prison sentences and huge fines, deserve praise for their courage and fortitude. But, with the exception of religious objections, their grounds for resistance remain questionable.

Indeed, as they have pointed out, a standing military is an unnecessary extravagance at odds with the wishes of the authors of the Constitution. But to argue that point while the nation grows more conservative with each day of recession is an exercise in utter futility — tantamount to promoting full-scale revolution.

The most pragmatic course, given these circumstances, is to instead work to preserve the fundamental roots of democracy. And the only real option, strange as it may seem, is to submit to a draft — not simply registration.

The obvious but overlooked logic behind this stand has been graphically illustrated in any number of countries that have maintained a standing professional army. And it is the military coup that citizen militias, as set forth in the Constitution, are intended to prevent. Our highly-centralized political system, with far too much power concentrated in the hands of one man — the president — would be especially susceptible to a swift military takeover.

A citizens draft — for all citizens, male and female, without deferment — would effectively put an end to the dangers of an army dominated by "lifers." And, as a side benefit, the mix of inductees guaranteed by a draft would put an end to the growing phenomenon of the armed forces as a refuge for the barely functional, a comfort to the many who worry about who's handling our nuclear weaponry.

Of course, it's patently unfair to force a young person to spend two years of his or her life in servitude with possible risk of life and limb. Nobody enjoys the prospect of government-enforced slavery. But the alternative is worse.

So, if the Reagan administration is serious about maintaining the armed forces, let it stop futzing around with registration and put the wheels of a draft in motion.

School prayer amendment is illegal

In these days of fundamentalist religions' political clout, the proposed constitutional amendment to allow prayer in public schools has become a major issue.

In viewing this topic from the constitutional and common sense approaches, I find this amendment has no place in the basic document of our government.

School prayer remained a common practice until 1962. In that year the Supreme Court, in the case of Engel vs. Vitale, determined this practice violated the separation of church and state. And, this is not the only constitutional question.

Pete LANG
The 14th Amendment instructs government not to "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." School prayer, in order to be constitutional, needs to protect the rights of all individuals — not just the rights of the majority. I feel the school prayer amendment would violate this principle.

The "non-sectarian" prayer for which the amendment calls would be similar to the Regent's prayer the high court struck down. The prayer reads: "Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon thee, and we beg thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers and our country."

It is safe to say the Regent's prayer has its roots in Christianity. Yet, this country contains a significant population of non-Christians whose definitions of "god" are considerably different from the Christian view.

To this nation's 66,000 Buddhists, two million Muslims and an atheist population estimated at 20 percent, a prayer on the Regent model violates their rights under the equal protection clause.

In order to achieve the goal of religious observance in schools without denying anyone equal protection, students should be allowed to practice their particular faiths. For example, while the Christians are gathering for prayer, the Muslims would be bowing toward Mecca. At the same time, the Buddhists are meditating and the atheists are discussing philosophy.

All citizens of this country are guaranteed religious freedom. This freedom is the right to practice whatever spiritual discipline you choose, whenever you desire. I think that implicit in this freedom is the right not to partake in a religious practice. Most pro-amendment politicians throw in the words "non-mandatory" or "voluntary." There is nothing voluntary about it. When the prayer starts being read over the public address system, what's the unwilling student going to do, not listen? Run out of the building each day?

The students are not the only people who hear the prayer. The teachers, administrators and janitors are mature adults with their religious views already well established. Those who do not want to participate have little choice.

This violates the non-participants' right not to practice a religion. Even for those who do pray, not all have the desire to speak to their maker at precisely 9:10 each morning.

One must keep in mind there are no laws forbidding anyone to pray. If students want to bow their heads in the middle of class, recess or lunch, more power to them.

Prayer has always struck me as an extremely personal and intimate process. I can't see how the same couple of dozen words each day will significantly heighten anyone's spirituality. On the contrary, the cut and dry routine of a daily prayer may turn some people off religion.

The church traditionally handles our society's spiritual needs. Public education by convention deals with academic needs. Our school systems currently are having a difficult time trying to teach everyone to read, much less anything else.

Education does not need to take on the responsibility, even in part, for the moral development of children. It should not be the duty of our government to legislate religious matters. The moral upbringing of this country's youth is a responsibility that should remain with the church and family.

The Constitution is a beautiful document, designed to guide American society to live together with equality and justice. Our founding fathers had the wisdom to separate church and state. Let's keep it that way.

LETTERS

'Close calls'

A good friend of mine once stated during the middle of one of those "Friday night philosophy" discussions, "We're all human beings, why kill each other?"

Now tell me, have you ever paused for a moment to consider it? Oh yes, there is always the reassuring answer, "Well, I never killed anyone, what can I do about it?"

We can always find someone else to lay our burdens on, but did you ever think you just might (kill someone) one day?

Let me put it a different way. Have you ever had a "close call" in your automobile? Maybe as a result of carelessness, or a lack of carefulness? "Oh yes, but that only happens to someone else," you say.

In my own relatively short period of driving, I have come prayers away from a serious high-speed collision more times than I've parallel parked. There was that time in the rain on New Circle Road when I was late for work. I didn't see the brake lights ahead. Fortunately when I turned sideways in the road, the other cars stopped. And then that time on I-75... Yet the idea of physical injury occurring to me seems impossible.

This summer the experience came into my life with the thud of the morning paper. Within a period of 72 hours, three of the most important people in my life were seriously injured in separate high-speed collisions. All were on their way to or from work and obeying all traffic laws. All were hit with full impact about 50 mph. All were lucky. Now my friends have an assortment of cuts and bruises on their face and hands, a fractured pelvis, a broken leg and foot, along with various internal injuries. I am lucky; they all will recover soon.

Now, I don't have the illusion of driving any better than the next guy. Being a notoriously impatient person, I am probably at least as dangerous.

But my point is this: why must we as human beings feel the need to jeopardize the lives of ourselves and others for the frivolous reasons we do? Who among us have never cut in front of someone, ran a yellow light or sped down a residential drive?

We often become entrapped so thoroughly in our every day routines that we will risk just a little too much in order to move a little faster. What does it take before we realize the responsibility to ourselves and to others we assume when we get behind the wheels of our cars?

Maybe if we were all just a little more conscientious and responsible in our driving habits, the road would leave more room for natural error.

Anyway, if you really don't care, I hope you never have to receive a call from the police asking you to come to the emergency room immediately.

Two victims

I'm sure the Kernel will be besieged by letters relating to the tragedy of last Wednesday night.

When I read the newspaper accounts I was compelled to write down my feelings concerning the disregard many students show toward basic traffic safety on campus. However, when I began to phrase my thoughts I ran into a wall. Then I saw the April 30 Kernel and realized Jim Harris beat me to it, and did a much better job.

As a dedicated bicycle commuter who obeys traffic laws and never passes cars on the curb side (which is another whole letter), I am especially aware of the same difficulties encountered by Mr. Harris. However, I am not fortunate enough to have two tons of hard metal protection.

I hope the gentleman who stepped out in front of me last year, causing me to destroy a front wheel and break my arm, appreciates the effort it took for me to avoid him serious injury — but I doubt it.

This brings to mind another thought: Lauren Trocin wasn't the only victim Wednesday night. The driver of the automobile will live with the experience for the rest of his life. My injuries were healed in six weeks; how long will it take for him? Thanks, Jim, I hope you spurred the rediscovery of the crosswalk.

Polish police shoot, kill at least 2 during Solidarity demonstrations

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Martial law forces shot and killed at least two Solidarity demonstrators, arrested 4,050 others in a dozen cities across the nation and declared yesterday that "no leniency" will be shown to the organizers of Tuesday's massive protest.

Authorities in Gdansk also discovered the body of a 22-year-old man with head wounds near the site of protests called by Solidarity on the second anniversary of the independent union, and launched a probe into the cause of death, officials said.

The wife of Lech Walesa, the interned Solidarity chief, told reporters in Gdansk after visiting her husband that the union leader opposed street rioting but felt workers should fight the authorities with "appropriate measures." She did not elaborate.

Solidarity's underground leaders called for the anniversary demonstrations and said they were a test of whether the union still had broad support.

Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, Poland's martial law chief and Communist Party leader, met with his Military Council of National Redemption and issued a series of law-and-order decrees, state television said.

The decrees included:

- Prompt action on investigations against dissidents from the Committee for Social Self-Defense, a key advisory group to Solidarity, and indictments "for offenses committed against the state and society."
- Speedy prosecution of people detained for participating in riots.
- Appropriate "resolute" steps by provincial leaders to "ensure peace and public order."

Warsaw's governor, Gen. Mieczyslaw Debicki, held a meeting of the Warsaw provincial defense committee and declared, "No leniency will be shown to the organizers and participants of (Tuesday's) riots."

President Reagan condemned the use of force in Poland.

Reagan

the Camp David framework as the only way to proceed and that "the language provides all parties with the leeway they need for successful negotiations."

Administration officials described the president's address as "a major new peace initiative."

Jordan called for a full Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza, in exchange for Arab recognition of Israel's right to exist and security guarantees.

Under the proposal, Jordan would be linked with the administration of the West Bank, at least as an interim measure, with Palestinian autonomy over use of land, water and other natural resources.

The plan also asks for the immediate freeze on Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, but does not call for dismantling any of them at this time.

In the aftermath of the settlement in Lebanon, Reagan said, "We now face an opportunity for a broader peace. This time we must not let it slip from our grasp. We must look beyond the difficulties and obstacles."

Many Israeli officials were hostile to the proposal before Reagan actually made his speech, but the diplomats were already at work.

Moshe Arens, Israel's ambassador to Washington, told Israel Television he expected "disagreements in the future, but I don't expect a confrontation."

"We think that the message contains deviations from the Camp David accords, and if this is the case we will say so to the United States, and that may be a subject for disagreement between us," he said, adding: "I suppose they will claim there is no deviation from Camp David and we will claim there is, and we'll overcome that too."

The Israeli opposition Labor Party welcomed Reagan's plan.

A senior administration official, briefing reporters on behalf of the president, said the administration hopes King Hussein of Jordan will see the proposals as a "significant and serious" initiative that will induce him to enter the peace process.

The official said that no response had been received from the four states given advance notice of the contents of the speech: Israel, Jordan, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

"We have put this before Israel and await their response," he said.

Overall, he said Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz believe that "the principle leverage the United States has... is the possibility of peace."

"And we want to put that up front and keep it up front," the official said.

Asked whether the United States might choose to exercise additional leverage over Israel by threatening to choke off military or economic aid, the official repeated the U.S. commitment to the security of Israel and said, "I don't think one wants to play around with weapons sales in this regard."

The official said Shultz may go to the Middle East if there are strong indications that such a trip would be "propitious and fruitful." He said, however, there are no immediate plans for a visit by Shultz.

Some 1.3 million Palestinians now live on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

Speaking to reporters in Santa Barbara, Calif., Larry Speakes, the White House deputy press secretary, said, "These events once again point up the need for reconciliation and restoration by the government of basic human rights in Poland."

"He (Reagan) deeply regrets and condemns the use of deadly force to break up peaceful demonstrations in Warsaw and other cities on Solidarity's second anniversary," Speakes said.

Reagan believes the killing will deepen what he called a chasm separating Polish authorities from the Polish people.

The government press office said in addition to the 4,050 arrested, 67 rioters and 108 policemen were injured Tuesday and 22 vehicles were damaged, including a fire truck that was mobbed to torch.

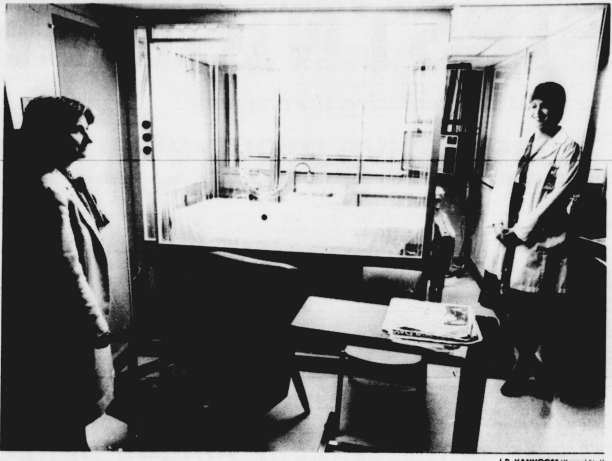

It said two rioters were shot and killed and 12 wounded in Lubin when police came under attack by an angry crowd there.

A communique from the military prosecutor's office said authorities were investigating the precise cause of the riots in Lubin that also left 11 policemen and one reserve officer injured.

Lubin, a copper-mining town of 67,000 people, is 14 miles north of Legnica, headquarters of Soviet troops garrisoned in Poland.

Authorities imposed an 8 p.m.-5 a.m. curfew for youths in Lubin and restricted adults to their homes from 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. Similar curfews were imposed in Wroclaw and four other towns in the area.

In Warsaw, people fashioned a cross of used tear gas canisters, a red banner with a black mourning stripe and a piece of paper reading "Heroes of Lubin."

Doctors announce marrow transplant program

By JASON WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

There may be hope for patients suffering from diseases once thought to be incurable.

A bone marrow transplant program, which has been developed over the past two years at the UK Medical Center under the supervision of Dr. John Thompson, chairman of the department of medicine, was announced yesterday.

The treatment involves the transplant of bone marrow from healthy donors to patients with compatible bone tissue who are suffering from several forms of leukemia or aplastic anemia.

Dr. Robert Ash will direct the program, the only one of its kind in the area. The UK program is similar to one he worked with at the University of Minnesota.

While the treatment is not guaranteed to cure the diseases, it is rapidly replacing such methods as radiation and chemotherapy as the preferred treatment, Ash said. BMT was first conceived in the late '50s, when experiments were performed on dogs.

Scientists developed conclusions from the studies, leading to the first human transplant in 1968. The operation was performed on an infant with a deficiency in his body's defenses against disease.

The process involves radiation treatment to condition the patient's bone tissue to accept the transplant. Methotrexate is given to the patient after the grafting of new bone marrow to prevent a syndrome known as graft-versus-host disease.

This is the body's rejection of a foreign substance, in this case the marrow graft. Blood transfusions given before the transplant can also increase the chances of the graft being rejected.

Thompson, who said he first became interested in the subject when he wrote a term paper on leukemia, was heavily involved with a similar program that began in 1979 at the University of Iowa.

He said that leaving Iowa was a difficult decision. One of the conditions for his coming to UK in 1980 was the beginning of the transplant here.

The first six months of work on the project were spent establishing facilities for a sterile environment for the patients, as any germs could prove fatal. Next came the utilization of equipment made available by Dr. Yosh Maruyama, the head of radiation therapy.

The equipment was coupled with recruitment of nutritional experts and specially trained nurses. Over the next year and a half, representatives were sent to similar programs across the country.

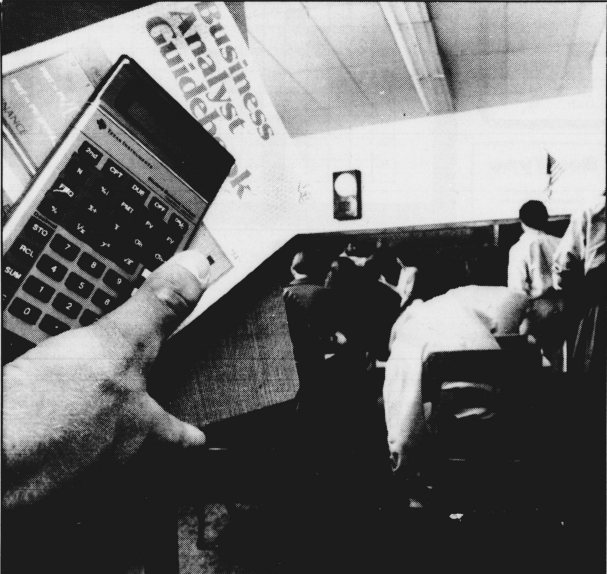

Ash is optimistic of the program's potential. "We're hoping to contribute... scientifically as well as to the treatment of patients with the best state-of-the-art equipment."

The medical center has one patient ready for the transplant, with two more possibilities.

"The availability of this center here," Ash said, "is a significant advantage for patients within this state and the region."

The UK unit and another fledgling unit at the University of Cincinnati will serve Kentucky, southern Illinois, southern Ohio, eastern Tennessee, Virginia and the Carolinas, he said.

Conservative group attacks humanities endowment fund

By JOHN GRIFFIN
Arts Editor

A right-wing political organization has launched an attack against the National Endowment for the Humanities on the grounds that it is pro-Communism, anti-familial and against national defense.

Members of the Conservative Caucus, which says it has 400,000 members, and other people agreeing with their viewpoints to their Congressmen which read: "I believe NEH should be abolished to prevent my tax dollars from being given to support pro-Communist propaganda, anti-family feminist movements and anti-defense organizations."

This action has prompted many independent responses from people around the country.

"We get letters daily protesting the proposed action this organization wants to take," said a NEH spokesman. "Some people are really outraged that anyone would even suggest something like this."

"We cannot understand why they want to get rid of us," he said, "because William Bennett, who was appointed as our chairman in December, is trying to depoliticize the NEH. He has said that no grants will be funded which are of any political origin."

Members of the Conservative Caucus could not be reached for comment.

"What we are going to follow (in the selection of whom is to receive grants) is the congressional mandate on funding projects," the NEH spokesman said. "This mandate was drawn up in 1965, and it is to provide financial support to individuals and institutions pursuing humanistic goals and knowledge of the humanities."

"This movement has nothing to do with the Endowment really, but (members of the Conservative Caucus) are upset by a tie which they seem to see between us and some programs they don't agree with," said Ralph Janis, chairman of the Kentucky Humanities Council. "Anybody who has looked carefully at what the Endowment backs will see that they've tried hard to be very responsible to the community."

Though it is not likely that the national organization will be dissolved in the near future, Michael Baer, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said the loss of this agency would affect UK and the entire nation.

"The University gets a significant chunk of the money which comes through the KHC," said Baer. "They provided the money for part of the Women's Writer Conference which was here last year. . . . They even gave some money to the College of Allied Health."

Other University projects backed by the KHC since 1980 include a visit from the National Theatre of the Deaf, the Symposium on Crime in the '80s, and seminars on Third World development and aging.

In response to the caucus' action, Baer sent letters to several Kentucky congressmen.

"I worked up communication with all the Kentucky senators and representatives around and got promising responses from them on the importance of the NEH. So I don't think they're in serious danger at the present, but you never know," he said.

"I don't know about this organization," Baer said, "but I do know that others have confused the term 'humanities' with 'humanistic,' which is anti-religious. They just don't know the difference."

Janis said, "NEH has two basic missions: the support of scholarship nationwide is the first, and the other is to promote public understanding of the humanities. Consequently, most of our money goes to support of scholarly research or public programs."

"In common sense terms, we're here to promote the education of the public by helping them to expand their abilities through critical thinking, writing and getting to know American culture."

"I think people are just confused with the term," Janis said. "We've had one person who thought we were the Humane Society. He asked us to take in a sick cat, which we'd like to do but could not."

'Diner' shows polish, but opening is crude

"Diner" might turn out to be the sleeper of this year's film crop. Like a diamond in the rough, this quiet little movie starts slowly and rather crudely but eventually turns into a polished expose on the importance of friendship in the growing process.

The title refers to the hangout of about five college-aged friends from Baltimore during the Christmas season in 1959.

Like most hangouts, the Fells Point Diner is their refuge from the rest of the world; it's the place where they can escape from the wife, an unpaid bookie or life in general. Unlike "American Graffiti," "The Lords of Flatbush" and other nostalgic glances at youth, "Diner" doesn't concentrate solely on practical jokes and sex. Instead, it uses both to express the characters changing ideas and values.

The quirky characters and situations, which Barry Levinson, the writer-director, has drawn from his own experiences, provide the magic of this entertaining picture.

His characters are on the threshold of maturity and adulthood, giving the audience a view of what they all once were and what some will become.

He has also assembled an excellent cast, most of whom are newcomers, which develops an easy, relaxed rapport. They play the various jokes and jibes off each other like a five-man comedy team; the characters themselves have been telling the same stories and stepping on the same lines for years.

Mickey Rourke, as Boogie, portrays the one guy who changes during the course of the film and, as such, he probably has the most sympathetic part. He makes the slightly off-beat hairdresser/law student a lost soul who doesn't know whether to take the step into adulthood.

He is an incurable dreamer who believes, as he tells one of his friends, that if you don't have dreams, all you have is nightmares. He chases after these dreams, too. And it's wonderful to see this errant knight mount his steed and ride off after an elusive princess.

Steve Guttenberg performs well as Eddy, the tense football fanatic who wants a blue-and-white wedding because those are the Baltimore Colts' colors.

Eddy is mature enough to know that a couple needs to have things in common for a happy marriage, but he goes about this search in the wrong way. He gives his fiancée a football quiz, and, if she fails, the marriage is off.

Levinson lets Eddy's character have a deeper side, though, because he shows that his nervousness is caused by his virginity. He thinks he might not know what to do, and he is also afraid that his friends might find out about his dilemma, which leaves him in a tight spot.

Not everyone will be enthralled by "Diner" because of its slow beginning, but, for those with the patience, it could be a rewarding experience.

"Diner" is playing at the Lexington Mall Cinema. Rated R for raucous jokes about sex. It rates a * * * on the Kernel's four-star scale.

Mexico nationalizes private banks, limits cash exchanges

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Jose Lopez Portillo yesterday ordered the nationalization of all private Mexican banks, and imposed currency-exchange controls to stop the flight of capital from Mexico during its worst economic crisis in half a century.

He ordered all banks closed until Monday. Foreign-owned banks are not affected by the nationalization.

Lopez Portillo said he took the action "because the critical conditions now require and justify it. It is now or never. They have already nationalized Mexico. It is not finished. They will not seek us again."

"The country can no longer permit the exit of dollars to pay for real estate acquired outside the country," the president said in his final state of the union speech before leaving office Dec. 1. "We should make every effort so that this practice ends."

On the flight of job-seeking Mexicans to the United States, Lopez Portillo said his country could not restrict the constitutional freedom of its inhabitants to leave.

"We will never accede to patrolling our borders," he said.

He criticized the United States for refusing to recognize communist-ruled Cuba, and said Mexico hoped to "conciliate the irreconcilable" by achieving contact between these "two great peoples."

The president said banks were taking money from the country against the nation's interests, and full exchange controls will be imposed.

He gave no details on the controls or how the nationalization would work.

The government already has frozen $12 billion deposited in Mexican banks to stem the exodus of dollars crucial to meeting the nation's $81-billion foreign debt.

In announcing during his 3½-hour speech to a joint session of Congress that U.S. and other foreign banks were not affected by the nationalization, the president said, "We are not involved in a witch hunt."

He acknowledged that the Mexico's economic crisis, the worst since the 1910-1920 revolution, had led to continued flight by impoverished Mexicans seeking jobs in the United States.

"Mexico does not accept any scheme that would restrict the constitutional freedom of all inhabitants to transit or leave Mexico," he said.

The Mexican president said $22 billion in funds had left the country in the last two or three years, much of it going to U.S. savings accounts and to buy real estate in the United States.

Admissions

Controversy also arose over the implementation of a new calendar for incoming freshmen to follow.

The committee proposed opening acceptance this Oct. 1 for students who may be immediately acceptable. Students could continue to apply past the December ACT date, but an application deadline of Feb. 1 for freshman candidates would be required.

The current application deadline is June 1. Students deemed immediately acceptable would have until March 1 to confirm their acceptance. On March 15, the applicant pool would be ranked, and acceptable students from the pool would be notified. Their responses would be due before April 15.

Wilson opposed the early application deadline, but Elbert Ockerman, dean of admissions, and Altenkirch both defended the proposal. Ockerman said he felt it was necessary to alter the admissions calendar.

The proposal now must be approved by the council, President Otis Singletary and Gallaher, the full University Senate and the UK Board of Trustees.

BRIEFS

Coalition sets seminar for parents

A seminar to help parents communicate more effectively with their children has been scheduled for 9 a.m. Sept. 11 at the Breckenridge Inn in Louisville.

The seminar, sponsored by the Kentucky Coalition on Teenage Pregnancy, will include a morning keynote address on strengthening the family by Dr. Effie Ellis, a pediatrician from Chicago.

In the afternoon, participants will attend their choice of two workshops on everything from understanding parental values about kids and sex to myths and messages aimed at children.

For more information about the seminar, contact the Kentucky Coalition on Teenage Pregnancy, P.O. Box 230, Louisville, Ky. 40201.

B&E plans seminar for secretaries

A development seminar for executive secretaries and administrative assistants will be conducted by the management center of the College of Business and Economics Sept. 16-17 at the Hyatt Regency.

Dr. Frank Anders of the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire will lead the seminar. Seminar hours are from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., each day.

The fee for the seminar is $225, including luncheons. Further information may be obtained by calling the center.

PHI BETA KAPPA

The membership Committee of Phi Beta Kappa is now receiving nominations for membership. The preliminary requirements which must be met in order for a student to be eligible for consideration for election are:

- (1) Over-all grade-point average of at least 3.5;
- (2) At least two 400-500 level courses outside the major;
- (3) At least 90 hours of "liberal" courses;
- (4) At least 45 hours of classwork completed on the Lexington campus;
- (5) Have satisfied, or will have satisfied by the end of the semester, the lower division requirements for the BA degree in the College of Arts and Sciences. Some exceptions to this may be made for students enrolled in the Bachelor of General Studies Program, but no exception will be made with respect to "Translation and Interpretation" requirement—this must be met.

Should you know any individual who you believe meets these requirements, then we would appreciate your urging that person to come to the office of Dr. Raymond H. Cox, Chairman of Phi Beta Kappa Membership Committee, College of Arts and Sciences, 257 Patterson Office Tower, to pick up an application.

In order to be considered, nominations must be received no later than Friday, September 10.

PLEASE NOTE: It is extremely important to read and, in fact, to believe that you meet the criteria necessary for election. It is expected that you will come to the above office for further information.
