New food plan popular at 16 benchmarks

Most of UK's benchmark universities already provide dining plans similar to one UK is considering.

UK may change from a declining-balance debit system to meal-perweek plans that allow students to choose based on how often they eat at UK restaurants.

The new meal-perweek plans could cost from $883 to $1.698 and give students between 123 and 220 meals a semester.

"Board Bucks at ime when our meal plans were not that popular," said Ramolt Lait, business manager of university dining at N.C. State.

However, Lait said there was one guiding principle his department needed to learn.

"If you give students what they want, they will stand in line to give you their money," he said. "Once we got a hold of that, we found out we made more money."

However, some have said the debit system works just as well, and they are satisfied with how it functions.

"Students so far are much happier because they don't have to carry cash," said Kathryn Bolasky, a student clerk in the meal plan office at the University of Arizona. "It's so much easier."

thought of the system changing.

"I think that would be a difficult transition to make," she said.

Paul Brown, director of housing and food services at the University of Washington, said any move toward a change at Washington would be met with opposition.

"I wouldn't want to be trying to change to a fixed meal plan with where our students are at," Brown said. "If we suggested changing, I think we'd run into substantial difficulty."

Brown said the system they use means students know where their money is going and how much is used, with-out having light eaters paying a heavier price than heavier eaters.

"With a declining balance, the play-ing field is equal," he said. "You pay for what you eat, which neutralizes that."

Brown said he also thinks part of this is because the system has been in place for so long.

"It's been in place for eons and that creates tradition and expectations," he said. "Our students don't talk about changing."

CDC encourages more adult AIDS screenings

NEWS BRIEF

No students attended a forum yesterday hosted by UK administrators to explain next year's tuition increase. Angela Martin, vice president for planning, budget and policy, said she was disappointed in the turnout. About 50 faculty and staff attended the forum. The cost of the increased screening "would be money well spent," said Dr. A. David Paltiel of Yale University, who led one of the studies.

"It's a financial winner as well as a clinical winner and a societal winner." said Dr. Samuel Bozzette of Rand Corp. and the University of California, San Diego, author of an editorial about the papers in the same journal. "It's very clear that people with HIV would benefit, as well as those at risk, and even future generations."

Current guidelines issued by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention call for screening people in groups with an HIV prevalence of 1 percent or higher — a category that includes intravenous drug users, men who have sex with men, and people who have unprotected sex, among others.

choice to break off disarramament talks or face deepening isolation from the rest of the world and greater suffering for its people.

Responding to North Korea's announcement that it has bullt nuclear weapons and was abandoning the disarmament talks, Rice outlined stark alternatives if the government of weapons.

Speaking to reporters at a meeting of NATO defense ministers in Nice, France, Rumsfeld said, "Given their dictatorial regime and their repression of their own people, one has to worry about weapons of that power in the hands of leadership of that nature. I don't think that anyone would characterize the leadership of that country as being restrained."

But where are they headed?

Last year, senior SeSe
Helm's play trailed off as the Southeastern Conference schedule wor on — something UK can't afford this season.

But where are they head to ask about that, because it will come back to me," Potts said when asked for a response to DeMoss' comments of UK's lack of leadership. "Im at a loss for words, guys."

But on the floor she can

I'm sorry."
But on the floor she can be UK's go-to scorer. She rebounds well, oftentimes leading UK on the boards. She can lead by example.
UK needs leadership. Potts can leave it on the floor—and UK can win.

Freshman center Sarah Elliott goes up for a contested slid last night at Memorial Coliseum. Elliott had 11 points and four rebounds in the loss. UK moved to 3-6 in the Southeastern Conference, while Florida improved to 4-5 in the SCA.

Not to our surprise, her estimate low-balled the actual figure announced this week.

"This university needs to come up with a long-term plan so that down the road, we'll reach a point where we don't have to raise tuition." Watts said.

If the BOT passes this budget as expected, its next step should be to urge the university to not propose any further tuition increases until such a plan has been prepared.

Otherwise, UK will be a top-20 school with no hope of attracting quality students.

Q&A with Carol Jordan

Director of the Center for Violence Against Women

Kernel staff writer Elizabeth Troutman sat down yesterday with Carol Jordan, director of the Center for Violence Against Women, to discuss cases of sexual assault on campus and what students can do to prevent sexual assaults. When the content is a sexual sexual to the content of the content

O Define rape. How often does rape occur on campus?

what we learned of the sections.

What we learned from that was 20.8 percent of women at the university had experienced some form of sexual violence during their time as students. their time as students.
Four percent of students had the experience of forced rape, which is a more restricted legal definition.

Q. What are some comm misconceptions students have about think some of the misconceptions are who poses a risk to them.

What we learned from our study last spring semester is most women believe that the people they needed to fear were strangers. The vast majority felt that it was a stranger who was most likely to perpetrate a crime against them, whether that be a physical assault or a sexual assault.

What we saw was, more than 80 percent of the time, it is someone who is known to the woman who commits an assault. Part of the education we need to do for women is about the exact nature of forms of violence they may experience. It is more likely to come from someone they know, potentially from a date or acquaintance or a husband or ex-boyfriend.

I think we also we need to target education for men. We need to understand that most of the time it is men that perpetrate sex crimes on campus. Certainly only a very small subset of college men are sexually aggressive, but all men have a role to play in ending violence against women.

We know, in studies nationally.

women.

We know, in studies nationally, that 12 percent of college men reported having coerced or forced a woman to have sex with them. In my mind that is an exceedingly high number, and what we find in those same studies is that the majority of men did not believe that act was illegal.

So I think we need to do a better.

So I think we need to do a better job of educating men that these behaviors are intolerable, and the fact crime to authorities?

A Most rapes do go unreported. That's true among all age groups.

Community prevent the continuation of rapes going unreported?

q unreported?

A. I think it is important that we communicate to women that this is a campus where, if something happens to them, they can report it and get the support and intervention they need.

I think it is a goal of ours to increase reporting, and I think over the next year this campus will see an increase in the number of reported rapes — not because we have more rapes going on at UK — but I rather because, if we are successful, we will create a climate that is more embracing for women a climate that is more embracing for women and they will feel more comfortable coming out and talking about

Q. What advice do you give to stu-dents entering into a social setting where there is potential for

We know that, for all women, about 16 percent of the time they will report to law enforcement. law enforcement.

If you look at campus women it is closer to about 5 percent nationally. What we find here at UK is that the numbers are even lower. That is an important lesson to us that we need to do a better job of educating women that they can come forward. They can report to counseling and testing centers, they can talk to a faculty advisor or a resident advisor. There are all kinds of places where they can reach out.

We know women don't report of

we know women don't report of-ten sometimes if they are scared, be-cause they have been threatened, sometimes because they are not real-ly sure it was a big deal, sometimes because they feel guilty or ashamed that it happened, and sometimes it's peer pressure.

Describe some of the concerns victims express after a rape.

I think that a woman's reaction to rape is unique. We often see shock, trauma reaction, guilt, embarassment. But it really depends on the woman that the reaction is what we need to communicate to incomen is, whatever their reaction is, it's completely normal and that the react people who will understand.

Q. What can the university do to prevent rape from occurring?

A. I think the seriousness of violence against women means that we have to be visionary about how to end it. We have to be persuasive and determined, and I think at UK we are all of these things.

Last September, Dr. Todd named a Women's Safety Advisory Committee, and I believe you will see us come forward with a comprehensive plan that covers five major areas; prevention, rape to occur?

A. We have a message to give men and women that perpetrating any act of sexual aggression whether that be with use of a drug, with verbal pressure, whether that be with physical force, is completely intolerable and is something this university will take very serious steps to end.

For women, it is important to be educated. We know from our own research here at UK that a significant percentage of rape involves the use of alcohol, both on the part of the offender and the part of the victim.

For women alcohol increases their value of the complete of the proposed of the complete of the complete of protecting themselves. We know, of the women of UK, about 12.5 percent of them were raped with use of a date-rape drug.

Certainly they need to be informed about the increased vulnerability of an environment where they are drinking or where there is drug use, and they need to take steps to be well protected in that environment. Whether that be not drinking, Reping a close watch on whatever beverage they are drinking, there are steps women can take.

The message needs to go out to men that we are not going to tolerate these acts of violence.

these acts of violence.

Q. Is it practical for a student to take civil action against a rapist?

A. Absolutely it is feasible to take a case to civil court. In the state of Kentucky, over the last few years, we have attempted for all crime victims to increase the opportunity they have to proceed civilly. Women have the ability to sue a They also have the ability to sue a sue state and they also have the ability to sue the support of the

UK students out of line with Walsh chants

I had been planning to write a letter about the repugnant student behavior at Tuesday night's Florida men's basketball game but waited until I had cooled down. When I saw Tim Wiseman's column on Thursday, I was relieved that the initial rebuke of those fans came from one of their peers instead of from one of their professors.

As a communication professor and a former journal-ist, I know the importance of maintaining free speech in this country. However, as Wiseman pointed out, the "Walsh is gay" chant was both offensive and not very cre-

There are two lessons to be learned here: 1) saying There are two lessons to be learned here: 1) saying someone is gay as an insult is offensive to all the gay fans who watched the game in person or on ESPN, and 2) Walsh remained unaffected, as do most players. My message to those fans — you wish you were a part of the game and, frankly, you are not; you are observers because you lack any of the skills necessary to participate because you lack any or the samp pate.

We at UK have so much to be proud of: 1) The Cats (that's all that needs to be said); 2) the cheerleaders (they are "the" college cheerleaders); 3) the balladic and beautiful dance team; 4) funny and crowd-pleasing mascots; 5) a rocking band of master musicians; and 6) a traveling fan base that is larger and more loyal than any in the country.

I only wish we had a student cheering section we could be proud of and add to this list. At the moment, we have insensitive, spoiled children in need of a diversity

'Small' lives shouldn't go unnoticed

'Small' lives shouldn't go unnoticed

Whether she realizes it or not, Hillary Canada's Wednesday column "A Small Life is Still Valuable" makes an excellent, but unpopular, point regarding gender and the work force. Just because a woman doesn't make front-page headlines doesn't mean she is less significant or important. Condoleezza Rice makes headlines, but when do we hear about her mother? Or Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's mother?
Or Ronald Reagan's mother, or JFK's, or Lincoln's? Their names are lost in the tide of history.

Yet take a look at their quiet legacy. In the "small" lives that they lived, they reared great men and women of history. Reagan's mother brought him up in faith, as did President Bush's. Secretary Rice's mother instilled values such as music and religion in her from a young age. Justice O'Connor's mother lived with her on a ranch, bringing sophistication to her life.

All of us can think back to where our mother (or absence of one) shaped our life significantly. As Canada points out, none of these women are or were "dumb" just because they choose to stay at home and raise children. Anyone who knows can tell you: Stay-at-home moms play

Anyone who knows can tell you: Stay-at-home moms play all the bases and positions imaginable. Let's not be so quick to judge any life as "small;" the "small" lives being lived now may govern our planet in
