Universities bring budget woes to Frankfort

By JAY BLANTON
Executive Editor

FRANKFORT — UK President David Roselle just recently learned that two faculty members were leaving UK because the University could not afford to pay them competitive salaries.

But that is only the beginning of the vacating faculty list, Roselle said yesterday.

The University has recently lost faculty in political science, chemistry, statistics and history — simply because UK cannot match offers that professors are getting from other institutions.

"We compete for our faculty in a national arena," Roselle said. "The building of good faculty is a long-term commitment and Gov. Wallace Wilkinson's budget proposal is a setback to that commitment."

1988 State Legislature

But there probably weren't too many tears shed for UK's situation in the Capitol yesterday.

In a hearing that lasted more than three hours, presidents from the state's eight universities appeared before a House subcommittee on education to paint the same dismal picture about the effects of Gov. Wallace Wilkinson's budget proposal on higher education.

The eight presidents all voiced the same concern to the 10-member committee — the governor's budget, if passed, is a step backward for higher education.

Specifically, each university president said that the governor's budget recommendations for higher education funding would:

- make it hard to keep up with the fixed costs at a university, which include social security and life and health insurance.
- result in layoffs of faculty and staff as well as affect the ability to conduct basic maintenance.
- impair access for students wanting to go on to college (because of resulting increases in tuition rates).
- allow no room for faculty salary increases next year and only a slight one the following year.

Wilkinson's budget recommends a 0.5-percent increase in higher education funding in the 1988-89 fiscal year and a 3-percent increase the following year.

The presidents each agreed that something must be done with state's ...base in order to increase funding for higher education.

While most presidents did not call outright for a tax increase, they agreed that the tax structure of the state must be re-examined.

"It's not a matter of whether new revenues are needed," said University of Louisville President Donald Swain. "It's a matter of time."

But Kentucky State University President Raymond Burse was more adamant about what needed to be

Wilkinson apparently backs Gore

Associated Press

FRANKFORT — All indications are that Gov. Wallace Wilkinson will endorse U.S. Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee for the Democratic presidential nomination instead of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Wilkinson is scheduled to attend a news conference Monday morning at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C. The room has been reserved by Gore's presidential campaign committee.

Wilkinson said Tuesday that he had made his decision and informed the candidate. But he declined to name his choice.

Sources have told several Kentucky newspapers and The Associated Press that Wilkinson picked Gore.

Early last month, Wilkinson said he was inclined to back Dukakis, citing the Massachusetts governor's economic development policies and the perception that he was the candidate best positioned to beat the Republicans in November.

But Wilkinson left himself an out, saying then, "I reserve the right to change my mind."

The Gore campaign reacted swiftly. Gore traveled to Frankfort for a 40-minute discussion with the governor in his office. The two emerged with Wilkinson saying he could support either Gore or Dukakis.

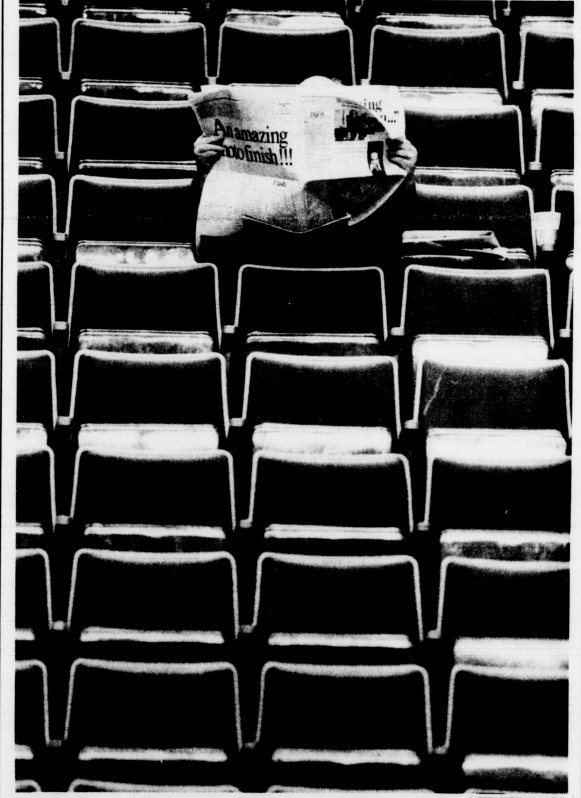

Later that same week, Wilkinson hosted a dinner for about 150 of his political supporters. Their sentiment was overwhelmingly in Gore's favor, although they said they would back the governor's choice.

Wilkinson's endorsement could come at a key time for Gore, who is banking on a successful performance in the "Super Tuesday" primary on March 8 throughout Southern and border states to propel his candidacy.

Recent polls indicate that former U.S. Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado is leading in the South despite Gore's extensive efforts. Support from Wilkinson almost assuredly would boost Gore's chances in Kentucky.

If he chooses Gore, Wilkinson would become the second Southern governor to throw support Gore's way, joining Tennessee Gov. Ned Ray McWhorter.

Law school prof wins $4,000 award for review article

By SHARON RATCHFORD
Staff Writer

On Jan. 21, Thomas J. Stipanovich wasn't in a UK classroom teaching law. He was in New York, accepting a $4,000 award from the Center for Public Resource Legal Program for an article he wrote on the problems and possible solutions of commercial arbitration.

Arbitration is the out-of-court settling of disputes between or among parties, usually who are bound by contracts.

The center, which is sponsored by corporations and law firms that acknowledge dilemmas in litigation, gives several awards a year for achievements in arbitration methods and for an article published by an academic.

Stipanovich's article appeared in the Iowa Law Review in March.

"The article has already excited quite a bit of interest and comment" among arbitration people, said Stipanovich, who worked for an Atlanta firm before coming to UK in 1981.

Commercial arbitration can be used in any dispute over contracts, except for those involving collective bargaining, he said.

Stipanovich's award "reflects very favorably on the school," said Alvin Goldman, a professor at the UK Law School.

"It demonstrates the high quality of scholarship ... of a younger member of the faculty," Goldman said.

Although much is being written about the general topic of dispute litigation, much isn't being written about commercial arbitration, Stipanovich said.

"I was sort of intrigued by it (arbitration) because there was so little serious articles written about it," he said. "Most of the pertinent literature had been written by practitioners."

Stipanovich worked in construction law while a member of the Atlanta firm. The majority of construction cases are arbitrated instead of being taken to court, he said.

In arbitration, a panel of professionals hears the arguments of the various sides of the case. Usually, an architect or an engineer will sit on the panel with a lawyer and an experienced contractor, he said.

Stipanovich often sits on the panels.

"I think it's superior to what you find in court — particularly where juries are concerned," Stipanovich said.

His article primarily addressed arbitration cases where more than two parties are involved. Such cases often arise when contractors have subcontracted work to other contractors, he said.

Although arbitration traditionally is viewed as being quicker and less expensive than taking a case to court, "arbitration can be just as costly and time-consuming as litigation," Stipanovich said.

Scholarships make French stays possible

By JULIE ESSELMAN
Staff Writer

UK students who are proficient in French and eager to spend a year in France may now apply for scholarships either to study at a French University or to teach at a grade-school.

The Deauville (France) Twin Cities Association is sponsoring the UK-Deauville Scholarship Program to provide funds for one UK student to study at the University of Caen and one student to be a teaching assistant in France next year.

"It's something the twin-city program has arranged," said Suzanne Kifer, study abroad adviser for the UK Office of International Affairs, "but we're doing the selecting (of students)."

A scholarship recipient will enroll in the University of Caen and either take a special French language training course or enroll directly as a regular student, depending on the student's language skills.

"If they need to improve their French, they can participate in courses geared for foreign students," Kifer said. Otherwise, "they can choose from the courses offered by the University."

This includes French literature, civilization and methodology of teaching French as a foreign language. The student must make arrangements with his or her adviser to gain approval for proper transfer of credit.

The scholarship will pay for tuition and lodging either with a French family or in a dormitory, but the recipient will have to provide his or her own funds for travel, food and other expenses.

Once in France, the student is in a very independent position, Kifer said. "They're on their own completely," she said. "They may have some contacts there. They can take whatever trips they want, do whatever they want."

For this reason, the scholarship committee is looking for open-minded and readily adaptable students, Kifer said.

"It takes a very mature kind of student because you're going on your own to live in France," she said.

In addition to being in their third year of college-level French and having had the equivalent of FR 312, students should show academic excellence, knowledge of France and a great deal of motivation, according to the selection criteria.

The recipient of the teaching assistant scholarship will teach conversational English at an elementary school in Deauville, in the region of Normandy. Estelle Dufils, an exchange student from Deauville, said the city is "just wonderful. It's a tourism town, right on the beach."

The scholarship provides for lodging, salary and partial board, with the possibility of classes at the University of Caen once a week.

To be eligible, students should have had at least two years of French as well as teaching experience and "sensitivity to children."

Applications are available in 102 Bradley Hall and should be turned in by Feb. 8.

Arts & Sciences hopes fund-raiser nets $30,000

By AMY HECKROTTE
Contributing Writer

"Invest in the Future" is the theme of the fourth annual College of Arts & Sciences phone-a-thon which will be held Feb. 7-18 at the Survey Research Center.

Mary Burg, director of alumni affairs for the college, said she hopes to raise more than $30,000, which is $6,000 more than last year's pledges.

"Private donations are even more important to the college this year," Burg said.

If Kentucky Gov. Wallace Wilkinson's budget is approved by the General Assembly, the college might have to stop some of the services it offers, she said.

Each department maintains an active research program, in addition to performing community service activities.

The money raised through the phone-a-thon can go to any department the pledger wants, Burg said. For instance, one year a man gave equal amounts to the UK Marching Band and to one of the academic disciplines in the college.

As in the past, Burg said the phone-a-thon will also take suggestions from alumni on how the college could be improved.

"After each phone-a-thon I've sent many memos to appropriate departments relaying messages about the suggestions offered," Burg said.

This year scholarships of $1,250 were awarded to four Arts & Sciences college freshmen from money raised by phone-a-thons, Burg said.

"We would like to increase our scholarships next year," Burg said. Donations have also increased the academic enrichment program, she said. Some events made possible were the English department's Visiting Writers Series and talks sponsored by the physics and astronomy departments about Supernova 1987A, which was the most brilliant exploding star discovered by scientists in more than 300 years.

This year, Burg said about 8,000 alumni would be called. Burg said she anticipates one pledge to be made for every four calls made.

"Our previous phone-a-thons have been successes," Burg said. "Last year we had a 90-percent return of pledges made."

The first phone-a-thon in 1985 raised $15,000 in pledges, she said, and in 1986 that figure increased to $26,000.

"Whatever the amount raised this year," Burg said, "we'll consider the phone-a-thon a success."

Task force calls for changes in elections

By JAMES WEBB
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Limitations on campaign contributions and stronger measures to combat election fraud were recommended in a report issued yesterday by a state task force on election reform.

The Special Commission on Election Reform was created by the Legislative Research Commission after a series of reports by The Courier-Journal about widespread abuse of the election process in Kentucky.

"As we have heard and read, the fairness of our election system is threatened by vote-buying, absentee ballot and voter-assisted abuses and the rising influence of huge sums collected and spent to finance campaigns," said Livingston Taylor, the chairman of the task force.

"We believe it is time for Kentuckians, acting through their elected officials, to launch a counter attack against those who would cynically undermine the elections system for their own selfish purpose."

Among other measures, the task force would:

- Limit individual and political action committee contributions per candidate per election to $3,000 for governor and $1,000 for all other candidates.
- Require the random selection of election judges to prevent judges from teaming up at the polls to allow election violations.
- Boost the offense of buying and selling votes from a misdemeanor to a felony, punishable by a fine of up to $5,000 and up to five years in jail.
- Bar election officers who violate election laws from serving again during a five-year period.

• Expand the Registry of Election Finance, giving it broader powers to investigate alleged election abuses, audit election-finance reports and seek prosecution.

Taylor and commission member

Raymond Larson said the registry staff would be increased and it would be given the authority to head the state's investigations of election abuses.

Attorney General Fred Cowan created a similar task force which issued its report in January.

University heads talk budget woes

but Roselle said the costs of social security, new buildings and a 2-percent salary increase would cost about $8.5 million next year.

It is particularly distressing, he said, that the governor's budget doesn't recommend the a 2-percent raise and more students obtaining high school diplomas or equivalent diplomas.

UK is $3,200 behind comparable institutions in faculty salaries. With the governor's budget UK would fall even further behind, Roselle said.

"I find it difficult to deal with the fact (that university employees) weren't included in the small increase," Roselle said.

Other state universities, however, face even worse problems in keeping faculty salaries at a competitive level.

At Murray State University, faculty salaries are $7,500 behind its benchmark schools, according to MSU President Kayla Stroup. With the budget proposal MSU salaries would fall $9,100 behind in the 1988-89 fiscal year.

Trying to cope with low faculty salaries and other budget constraints will also seriously affect students and their access to universities, according to Nelson Grote, president at Morehead State University.

Morehead has committed $1.2 million to student financial aid, Grote said, but with the budget presented the school will have to reduce financial aid money.

This reduction would come at time when education in eastern Kentucky, where Morehead is located, has just started to take off, Grote said. This surge in interest for higher education is reflected in increased community college enrollment and more students obtaining high school diplomas or equivalent diplomas.

But with the proposed budget the signal being sent is that "maybe higher education isn't too important," he said.

The proposed budget, if enacted by the legislature, also could mean turning away prospective students, said Kern Alexander, president of Western Kentucky University.

With rapidly increasing enrollment in the last few years and lower state appropriations, WKU is being forced to consider not letting some students come to Western. Alexander said. One out of every 10 students at WKU will not be financed by state appropriations.

But beyond students, low funding for higher education could have a serious impact on the economic development of the state, Swain said.

By not funding higher education adequately, Swain said the state is "uncoupling" itself from economic development.

"If we don't have (this link) we are making a colossal mistake," he said. "What a mistake."

In his six years at KSU, Burse said he always thought he was moving forward.

But with this budget, he said, "this will be the first time (we) have to walk backward."

Kennedy approved 97-0 to highest court

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate swiftly and unanimously confirmed Anthony M. Kennedy to the Supreme Court yesterday, ending a ferocious political battle that began seven months ago.

Kennedy, a federal appeals court judge who was President Ronald Reagan's third choice to succeed retired Justice Lewis F. Powell, was approved by 97-0 with Democrats and Republicans alike praising him as a moderate, open-minded conservative.

Reagan, in a statement, said he is "extremely pleased" and declared Kennedy "will make an outstanding addition to the Supreme Court. . . . The Senate has not only restored to the nation a full nine-member Supreme Court, it has reaffirmed this country's commitment to the philosophy of judicial restraint."

In Sacramento, Calif., Kennedy issued a statement saying he could "conceive of no greater honor for an attorney or a judge" than to serve on the Supreme Court, and adding he is committed to the American constitutional system.

Kennedy, 51, will be sworn into office Feb. 18, becoming the 10th justice in the history of the nation's highest court.

He is expected to play a pivotal role on the sharply divided court, particularly on such issues as abortion, affirmative action and separation of church and state.

His confirmation, after a pro forma one-hour debate, was in marked contrast to the stormy fight touched off by the nomination last July of Robert H. Bork.

Bork, Reagan's first choice to fill the vacancy created by Powell's June 26 retirement, was denounced as a rigid right-wing ideologue who threatened individual freedom and civil rights progress. The Senate rejected him by 58-42 on Oct. 23.

Reagan, calling Bork the victim of a lynch mob, then picked Douglas H. Ginsburg, who withdrew from consideration after admitting he had smoked marijuana while a Harvard law school professor.

Kennedy was extolled Wednesday by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., as a man of "integrity, intelligence, courage and craftsmanship" embracing a "judicial philosophy that places him within the mainstream of constitutional interpretation."

The liberal senator, who is not related to the nominee, was pinch-hitting for Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-

Del., in leading the placid Senate debate.

Biden, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee that recommended Kennedy's confirmation by a 14-0 vote, missed yesterday's debate because of illness.

Also absent were two presidential candidates, Sens. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., and Paul Simon, D-Ill.

Conservative Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., called Kennedy "one of the most eminently qualified individuals to be nominated" to the court.

"Judge Kennedy has vast judicial experience, participating in over 1,400 decisions and authoring over 400 published opinions," Thurmond said.

But liberals said they still have doubts about Kennedy's commitment to equality for women and minorities.

• Arbitration article

"All these things are double edged swords," Stipanovich said. For example, if one of the parties involved in an arbitration action protests the decision of the panel, the decision may then be reviewed by a court.

In other cases, the arbitrators may be slow. "The hearings themselves may drag on longer than in a courtroom, he said.

Nevertheless, "I think the process, in many ways, has been proven to be superior," Stipanovich said.

Stipanovich has written several other articles on commercial arbitration, including one published last year on whether arbitrators can award punitive damages.

The February issue of the Indiana Law Journal will include an article he did regarding lawyers' experiences in commercial arbitration cases. The basic information came from a survey by the American Bar Association, but Stipanovich spent more than 150 hours doing a computer analysis of the raw data, he said.

SGA policy fetters education charge of student lobbyists

As higher education in Kentucky is reaching a crisis point, many sectors of the UK community are rallying together.

We would like to congratulate and encourage these sectors, not least of all the Student Government Association. SGA's Student Lobby group has been working to gather and present student opinion to our state legislators in Frankfort.

So far, the group has begun working in favor of several issues, including bills concerning scholarships, the appointment of trustees and the establishment of a higher education investment plan. The group has also identified the need to oppose a local business group attempting to make commercialization of the Student Center illegal.

But as things start to heat up, we think they can do better. And so we want the SGA to rid the lobby of its ball and chain.

As it stands, the Student Lobby must seek permission from the Senate every time it wants to take a stand on a particular bill. This means that every time an issue or bill comes up in committee or the floor of the General Assembly, the lobby group theoretically must wait until the next SGA Senate meeting before it can tell legislators what students think.

Maintaining control over your forces is a good idea, but this restriction completely ignores all sense of timing and intensity in the legislative process.

The SGA Senate meets every two weeks to vote on legislative action. The General Assembly meets daily for 60 days every two years. Which means that come the beginning of April, everything will be all over.

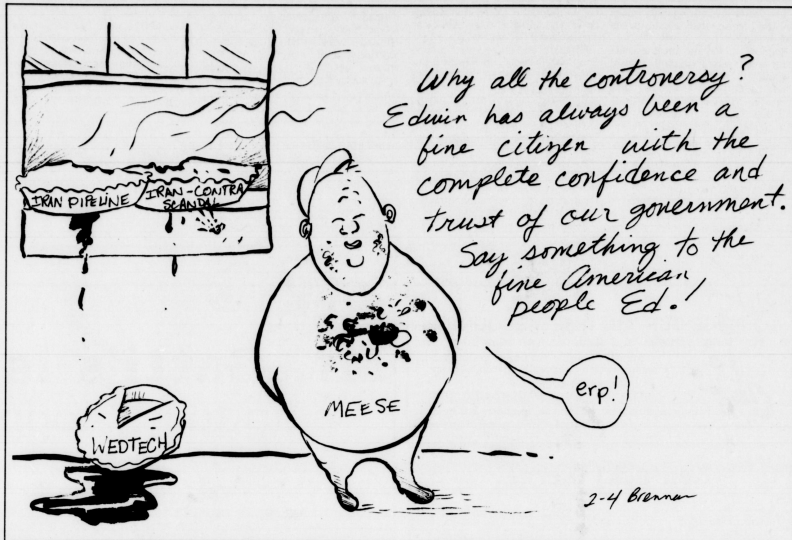

Important issues and bills concerning higher education are brought up every day. By the time the Student Lobby goes to the Senate, gets the key to its shackles, rubs its wrists and begins work, it might be two weeks behind. And even more, since a lot of jockeying is done behind the scenes even before a bill is officially discussed.

The Student Lobby was left with a charge to lobby for higher education. We suggest they be allowed to do that as efficiently as possible.

The lobbyists were selected on the basis of trust, qualifications and political know-how. When they sense an important opportunity to help the University's cause, they should be free to act.

Which doesn't mean they should be allowed to roam free. The group should be required to report all attempts, progress and money spent every two weeks when the Senate meets.

The Senate should keep a heavy eye on the purse strings, but a light hand on the ankles.

Scalding hot Slaughtering hogs is fast becoming a lost art in Kentucky

For awhile it seemed God was on the side of the hogs. He would let them off the hook, so to speak. But the King boys and I stuck with it, so to speak, and by late that awful rainy night we all went home with enough fresh pork to see us through the winter. The dogs didn't fare so poorly, either.

You would have thought scalding boxes had gone out of style. Fact is, they've just about gone out of sight. There are a few sitting around in tobacco barns, collecting junk and wearing holes through their metal bottoms, but quite a few modern folks wouldn't know a scalding box if it ran down the hill and bit them on the leg.

Naturally, it's only fit and proper that we searched Bath County as far as Bethel for what we needed to scald the hogs. Over on Flat Creek Road we ran into an acquaintance in a pickup truck who was willing to let us borrow his box, provided we returned it the next morning. Now that's a right neighborly thing to do, and not everybody will let you do that much. There are still a few old-timers who are downright tassy about their scalding boxes. How about you?

All we wanted to do was to scald two hogs. But, you'd think the hog god had something else in mind. We built a fire until we were just about blue in the face. No matter how hard we tried, we couldn't get the water in the box anything like scalding hot. It can't be lukewarm. It can't be boiling. Somewhere in the tappy middle is scalding. They've stopped teaching this sort of important stuff in school.

The two hogs — the overweight sow that wouldn't breed and the not-much-to-write-home-about boar — kept rooting around in the stockbarn lot as if to say "y'all ain't smart enough to get that water scalding hot." Well, as my mother used to say, "Let me tell you something." When my mother used to say that, it was time to listen. Besides, what a hog don't know can get it killed.

We dug another trench and built another fire straight from scratch. As darkness settled in on us, the next fire took off like it was made for television. Steam rolled out of the box like a bathhouse in Hot Springs, Ark. Bath County, Ky., was about to be made proud.

When Wayne was asked if he thought the two bullets he had brought with him would be enough, he replied: "Two hogs, two bullets."

I knew by the sound of that, we were in business.

The first 22 found its home between the eyes of the big sow, which weighed 500 pounds if she weighed an ounce. The boom on the back of the David Brown tractor wouldn't reach high enough to raise the sow entirely clear of the ground, but we moved her gently and maneuvered her slick as a mole into the scalding box.

The trick is to leave the hog just long enough in water that is hot enough to loosen the bristles, but not so hot nor so cool as to cause them to "set." Hog bristles that have "set" are about as hard to remove as steel reinforcement rods from concrete. Well, that's a little bit of an exaggeration. As one old reporter used to say, never let the facts get in the way of a good story.

The next trick is to get the scalded hog out of the box. Now, not everybody is cut out for this line of work. Make a mistake, and you get scalded along with the hog. You have to have chains fore and aft, and know how to use them in order to move the former critter up onto the nearby scragging board.

If everything has gone just right, you should be able to remove all the bristles, much as you would remove the feathers of a chicken after it has taken the final bath. My grandmother used to be real good at this sort of thing, but you just don't see lady folk performing this task as you once did. It always seemed to make grandmother Laura right proud.

Well, that was the effect it had on the King boys — Wayne and Darrell — and me in slaughtering these two hogs. You see, we were proud to be right there at the source, so to speak, instead of having our wives go to the supermarket and pick out bacon, sausage, pork chops and pork tenderloin at the meat counter as if it had never been critters in the first place.

But the best part of all were the hams, which will be cured and hung in the meat house for the next two years. Dodo Baldwin of Paris, who'd just as soon cure a fine ham as he would win a court case, helped me put down my two hams and a shoulder.

Two years? Yesiree, buddy. As far as I'm concerned a two-year ham is every bit twice as good as a one-year ham.

Lay a piece of old ham between a hot beaten biscuit, and if that don't make you jump up and slap your pappy, I don't know what will. Or, as Dodo says, it's enough to make you want to reach out and hug your grandmother.

Treat students like adults

During this semester at UK there has been some controversy on whether or not there should be an attendance policy for students.

As far as I'm concerned there should not be.

College students are old enough to be responsible for their own actions. If a student wants to skip class every once in a while then it should be up to that person to make up any work that they have missed. If a student turns in most of his work and does good in the class then he should pass without having to worry about failing because he missed class a few times.

Why should a student have to go every single day to every single class? Why should I have to come to class all the time anyway? Because I want to learn more and to become more intelligent? That's bull! Let's face it, everyone does not come to college just to learn more. Some people come to college to party, some to waste time until they know what they want in life and some people come to college just to get their degree so that they can get a job.

If I had my choice I would just go ahead and pay UK my tuition fees for the next four years right now and have them give me my degree so I could go out tomorrow and try to get my $20,000-$30,000 job.

Story showed poor judgement

For the record, the story reviewed

ing the Boys Choir of Harlem was excellent, but it is consistent quality too much to expect from the Kernel. It is heartwarming to know that the Kernel recognized the fact that the Boys Choir of Harlem was worthy of two stories, however, the story in Tuesday's issue (2/2/88) was a pitiful effort to cover probably one of the greatest events to grace UK's campus.

The reporter used poor judgment by choosing to concentrate on a negative comment made by one of the many people who were turned away from the sold-out performance instead of a comment by one of the many in attendance who cheered from the balcony in between continuous standing ovations and those who stood in the cold rain at the side door just to sneak a peek.

The reporter also failed to inform your readers of the extraordinary talent these young men possessed, in addition to their vocal talents. The choir performed perfectly choreographed skits and presented a very socially conscious selection of music. Not only did they sing classical, gospel and contemporary selections, their repertoire included "Say No to Drugs," "We Are Heroes" and a tribute to the struggle of South Africans.

Nevertheless, I encourage the Kernel to continue in their efforts to present balanced coverage of the numerous educational and cultural events that take place in our University community.

Sakharov not typical CIA-KGB double-agent

He looks like your Uncle Bif who's always showing off his high school football trophies. He sounds like a soft-spoken version of that little guy who harasses Rocky and Bullwinkle.

But former CIA-KGB double-agent-turned-defector Vladimir Sakharov is well-educated, disarmingly articulate and he offers valuable insights into the nature of U.S.-Soviet relations.

Vladimir met with the press for about an hour Tuesday, Jan. 26, at the plush, new Hilton Suites of the Lexington Green. He, not Andrei, was in town to address University of Kentucky students at Memorial Hall.

Considering there could be a grudge against this man, security was noticeably tight. There was none.

"I stopped fearing KGB when I stopped listening to CIA," said Sakharov. "I was afraid for about 10 years because CIA told me to be afraid."

One sensed that Sakharov disdains both of the rival agencies of spookdom.

Guest OPINION

"The CIA once told me there were 16 KGB agents in U.S. who were out to kill me," said Sakharov.

He decided the threat was so much CIA bullchips and, at that point, decided to lead his own life.

CIA protection ended in 1982.

"They're not responsible for me," said Sakharov.

According to Sakharov, the KGB has changed its tactics in dealing with defectors.

"The KGB has new tactic of getting defectors to redefect (back to the Soviet Union)," said Sakharov. "They consider this to be a great political victory."

He didn't speculate on the fate of those defectors who did return to the Soviet Union.

Sakharov is currently working with other defectors who, he says, are not being helped by the U.S. government and who are plagued by suicides, drunkenness and skid row. Sakharov believes the political climate in the Soviet Union under Mikhail Gorbachev may allow him to return home for a visit one day.

"The future of Soviet Union is bright under Gorbachev," said Sakharov. "The people are proud for first time in their lives. I would like to see these changes with my own eyes."

Asked if he could ever be enticed to redefect, Sakharov replied absolutely "not."

"I love America," he said. "I've

The Soapbox No Class

If Gov. Wallace Wilkinson has his way and gets his proposed budget for the next biennium passed by the General Assembly, UK will receive only about $90,000 more next fiscal year than it this year.

According to UK Vice President for Administration Ed Carter, UK needs at least $18 million, just to stay even.

So if Wilkinson's proposal is approved, UK's faculty and staff will most likely not receive the 5-percent raise President David Roselle wanted to give.

The Kernel wants to know how UK faculty and staff feel about this pressing issue.

What do you think the University and/or the state should do? Will you be willing to teach or work at a university when you could do the same thing out of state for more money? Or will you be willing to stay on and hope for better things in the next biennium?

Submissions to "The Soapbox" will be printed on the Viewpoint page Thursday, Feb. 11.

People submitting material should address their comments to "The Soapbox," Kentucky Kernel, 035 Journalism Building, Lexington, Ky. 40506-0942.

Writers must include their name, address, telephone number and major classification or connection with UK on all submitted material.

If letters and opinions have been sent by mail, telephone numbers must be included so that verification of the writer may be obtained. No material will be published without verification. All entries are subject to editing.

found a home here and I feel secure."

Despite what he sees as positive changes in the Soviet Union, Sakharov does not foresee a completely harmonious relationship between Americans and the Soviets.

Mistaken identities may have been an advantage while he worked as a double agent. They continue to be now that he's come in from the cold.

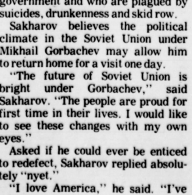

Thanks to the UK Student Government Association, Vladimir Sakharov faded away $7,500 richer.

Second half Wildcat explosion dooms Rebels at Rupp, 94-65

By TODD JONES

Mississippi coach Ed Murphy was hot. Really hot. We're talking foul-alarm job.

With 10:33 to play last night, Murphy looked up at the scoreboard in Rupp Arena and couldn't believe what he was seeing.

The 65-43 Kentucky lead had Murphy upset. But the fact that the Wildcats were in the bonus without committing a foul themselves had smoke billowing out of his nostrils.

"This just sucks," Murphy roared at the zebras scurrying away.

The referees thanked him for his opinion with a technical foul. This was just four seconds after Rebel guard Rod Barnes was also punished for naughty language.

The two technicals gave UK six points before Mississippi could get the ball back. They also fueled a Wildcat explosion that gave Kentucky a 94-65 victory.

The win upped UK to 14-3 and 7-3 in the Southeastern Conference. Ole Miss remained chained in the league dungeon at 2-7 and 0-10 overall.

"I quite frankly think the foul trouble we got in, in the second half was the difference," Murphy said.

"We got out there and the fouls were 10-zip. And that's a lot of free throws, and that's a lot of possessions."

Kentucky coach Eddie Sutton wouldn't comment on the guys in the black stripes. He did have an opinion on the game.

"It wasn't a very pretty game, but we won," Sutton said.

Ugly indeed. Both teams combined for 47 turnovers. The Rebels committed 26 themselves. That led to the blowout margin of 29 points.

The final score was a laugher. Don't let it fool you. The Rebels were seriously in the hunt for 30 minutes.

But Kentucky took a 57-43 lead on a Rex Chapman three-point jumper. It was the start of the Mississippi death march. The technicals moments later pointed the way.

The dark path for Mississippi was a 23-2 Wildcat run. The killer streak came in just 2:35. Kentucky led by 32 points with 8:15 to play.

All of this was only five minutes after an Edgar Ward stickback had the Rebels within 42-37. The end came that fast.

"We came out a little flat in the second half," Sutton said. "Then the next 13 or 14 minutes we played about as well as we could play."

The same could be said about the start of the game. It seemed Mississippi had one foot in the grave long before the 23-2 run. Like in the first four minutes after the opening tip.

Kentucky used a suffocating 1-2-1-1 press to force six Rebel turnovers in the first 4:20 minutes of the game. The Cats made four steals and four slam dunks to rattle off a dozen unanswered points. UK led 15-4.

Mississippi found an answer to the press and answered UK with a run of its own. Trailing 25-10, Barnes hit a three-pointer that started a 15-6 Ole Miss streak and got the visitors within 30-25.

Kentucky held together and took a 38-29 lead into the locker-room. That set the stage for all the fireworks and technicals in the second half.

UK senior guard Ed Davender did not play the entire second half.

"He didn't use good judgment on a couple of plays and he didn't use good judgment when he said something either," Sutton said.
