Former governor elected trustees chairman

By Brian Bennett
Senior Staff Writer

Just before Bert Combs left office in 1963, he convened the University Assembly, the only time it has ever met, to apologize for not doing enough for UK as governor.

Combs promised the gathering of faculty and staff he would leave a note on his successor's desk urging him to do more for UK.

Though his successor Edward T. "Ned" Breathitt found the note, Breathitt said there were other reasons he was determined to help UK grow.

Self-described as completely devoted to UK, Breathitt played a key role in one of the most progressive periods in University history.

During Breathitt's term as governor and Board of Trustees chairman, many landmark buildings were constructed and the Community College System flourished.

Breathitt, 67, was elected to his second term as chairman yesterday and said he's ready to serve UK again.

"The University gave me every opportunity to do what I've had an opportunity to do in life, and now I'm very fortunate to have an opportunity to serve the University again in an official capacity," Breathitt said. "It's very satisfying. And I suspect it's the one thing I'll spend most of the remainder of my time doing."

Growing up in Hopkinsville, Ky., Breathitt almost was predetermined to attend UK. Everyone, from his relatives to his high school principal, preached the benefits of going to the University.

"That's all I heard all my life was 'the University of Kentucky,'" he said. "I never thought of any other schools."

Breathitt attended UK, earning a bachelor's degree in science and commerce and his law degree. He said his experience at the University has been "the thing that really influenced my public career."

Of particular influence, he said, were the words of former UK President Frank McVey, who said a state can't be great without a great state university. Breathitt said he took those words to heart.

Once elected governor, it didn't take long for Breathitt to use his influence to help UK. Early in his term, the presidents of the state universities met in Louisville to decide how to divvy up state funds for higher education.

New UK President John Oswald didn't get the amount of money he thought he needed for a campus project. So, on his way back to Lexington, he stopped by the governor's mansion to ask Breathitt for help. The governor was sympathetic, Oswald said, and the UK president got the money.

Neither Oswald nor Breathitt could recall what the project was or how much money was needed, but Oswald called it "a significant figure."

"I felt he needed a little help to make sure he got his fair share,"

New Board of Trustees chairman Edward T. 'Ned' Breathitt and UK President Charles Wethington look over the agenda before yesterday's board meeting.

Breathitt said. "He needed it, and we felt he would do a good job with it."

Oswald, president from 1963 through 1968, said the incident was typical of the working relationship between the two men.

"He was very supportive and gave me tremendous encouragement," Oswald said. "He was very interested in progress and in improving education, particularly in his support of the University of Kentucky."

With Oswald as president and Breathitt as board chairman, UK went through a "period of the greatest number of changes the University ever had," said Lewis Cochran, vice president for the Lexington Campus during Breathitt's term.

The writing of the first governing regulations for UK, the elimination of life appointments for department heads, the implementation of the Community College System and the construction of the College of Law Building, Patterson Office Tower and White Hall Classroom Building were some of the changes that occurred during Breathitt's four years as chairman.

Trustees select New York firm to study area for new library

By Brian Bennett
Senior Staff Writer

Moving ahead in its plans to build a new central library, UK has selected a firm to study the proposed area for the building, UK President Charles Wethington announced at yesterday's Board of Trustees meeting.

Hardy Holzman Pfeiffer Associates, a physical planning services company based in New York, has been commissioned to look at the 30-acre Clifton Circle area, which is bounded by Rose Street and Columbia, Woodland and Hilltop avenues.

The announcement comes after UK's decision last month to hire the architectural company Kallmann McKinnell & Wood of Boston to design the library building.

Wethington said UK hired Hardy Holzman Pfeiffer Associates to study the land not only for the library, but also for the possibility of using it as the site of future University expansion.

"We want to plan this entire site for other buildings to be located around the library for the expansion of the academic core of the campus," Wethington said.

Hardy Holzman Pfeiffer Associates was chosen from among 27 firms that bid for the job. Wethington called the firm "the best that we could find in the country, and the world, for the completion of the library and the development of the academic core."

Donald Clapp, vice president for administration, said UK will pay the firm $125,000 plus expenses, which could be as high as $25,000.

The company will study factors like density, pedestrian patterns, traffic and parking around the area.

The new library building will have about 387,000 square feet and will cost about $58 million. Construction will take about two years and is slated to begin in Contract of athletics director C.M. Newton extended through 1996

By Brian Bennett
Senior Staff Writer

UK Director of Athletics C.M. Newton's contract was extended through 1996 by the Board of Trustees yesterday.

President Charles Wethington announced the three-year extension, which is retroactive to June 1.

"It's my extreme pleasure to have to have worked out an arrangement with Mr. Newton for him to stay on and provide the kind of leadership to the athletics department that he's been doing in this time here at UK," Wethington said.

Newton said all terms of the contract, except its length, are the same as his previous one.

Newton, 62, became UK's seventh athletics director April 1, 1989 during an NCAA investigation into the men's basketball program.

During his tenure, Rick Pitino was hired as men's basketball coach, and Bill Curry was hired as football coach.

The objectives of the athletics department remain "keeping the student-athlete at the heart of the program," continuing "total compliance" with NCAA rules and competing nationally in every sport, Newton said.

He said his goals for the next four years include enlarging and renovating of Commonwealth Stadium, making sure the athletic department is on "solid financial footing" and ensuring equality between men's and women's sports.

"I'd like very much to achieve gender equity, not just as a philosophy, but in total practice," Newton said.

A UK graduate and member of the 1951 NCAA champion basketball team, Newton started his coaching career in 1956 as Transylvania University's head basketball coach.

From there, he moved on to the University of Alabama, where he coached until 1980.

Immediately before coming to UK, Newton was head coach at Vanderbilt University for seven seasons.

Newton has also served as vice president of USA Basketball, and as chairman of USA Basketball's Games Committee, he played a large role in selecting the players on the 1992 gold-medal winning "Dream Team."

Newton, a native of Rockwood, Tenn., said he plans to stay at UK until the end of his career.

"The height, really, of my professional career is right now here — because of what we've got a chance to do," he said. "It's an exciting time at the University of Kentucky."

Hockey club may play at Lexington Ice Center

By John Kelly
Sports Editor

The Lexington Ice Center is considering a proposal by the UK hockey club and the Wesley Foundation and may reverse its July decision not to allow the Cool Cats to play home games at the rink.

Both Mark Shupe, who serves as a business manager for the hockey club, and Dennis Hyde, manager of the Ice Center, said the 11th-hour negotiations are still in their infancy. Neither was willing to discuss the details of the proposal, except in vague terms.

"If they can assure that they can solve the problems of the past, then there very well could be some ice hockey games here," Hyde said.

Bill Moore, who heads the campus Wesley Foundation, more commonly known as the United Methodist Student Center, said the Foundation is, in effect, acting as a "sponsor" for the club.

"We are pursuing that right now," Moore said. "Basically, the team just wants to play hockey. And we want them to be able to do that. We think this is a worthwhile organization. What we are doing is lending some credibility and accountability to that organization."

Shupe added that a written agreement wouldn't be possible until the end of the week because two parties involved in the negotiations — Ice Center owner Tom Christopher and the Wesley Foundation's liaison between the club and the Ice Center, John McIntosh — are out of town.

Moore remains optimistic.

"It looks good right now," Moore said. "We just basically need to sit down with all of the involved parties and hammer out the details before we can sign any agreement."

Moore only offered rough details of the proposal.

Moore said the Wesley Foundation will use its resources to manage the Cool Cats home games at the Ice Center. The Foundation would have a treasurer who would be responsible for monitoring the

Legislator indicted in 2nd investigation

Freshman state Rep. Tom Smith of Knox County was indicted yesterday for allegedly extorting money in exchange for promises to influence parole and sentencing decisions in state and federal courts.

Federal officials said the indictment is the first public revelation of a new investigation of Kentucky corruption, this one code-named Crabgrass. Prosecutors and the FBI said the investigation involves state government corruption and related matters, but they refused to provide details.

No arraignment date has been set for Smith, a Republican.

Smith and his attorney could not be reached for comment yesterday.

The four-count indictment alleges Smith extorted $13,750 from Cliff-ford and Theresa Brown of Knox County in exchange for his promise to use his influence to gain favorable treatment for Clifford Brown.

U.S. Attorney Karen Caldwell declined to say what Smith did for the money, if any of it ended up with parole officials or if Smith actually influenced Brown's case.

Under federal law, though, it is not necessary for any actions to be taken in exchange for extorted money.

Dave Kohl, special agent in charge of the FBI in Kentucky, said the Crabgrass investigation began about a year ago. He said more evidence has been compiled that will be presented to a grand jury.

He and Caldwell declined to talk about the investigation, except to say that it was an FBI undercover operation confined to the eastern part of the state.

Kohl said the code name was a play on Kentucky bluegrass, but this operation was designed to weed out corruption. The BOPTrot investigation of government corruption has already produced nine indict-

United Way campaign gets off to 'good start'

By Lance Williams
Contributing Writer

The first results are in, and the figures are optimistic for the University's United Way campaign.

As of yesterday, contributions from 45 UK faculty and staff members involved in the Leadership Campaign totaled more than $13,000.

The goal for the campaign, which began Thursday, is more than $460,000.

"This is a good start for us," Susan Byars, UK campaign co-chairwoman said.

The early figures are welcome news for United Way of the Bluegrass's campaign workers, who have been trying to counteract any negative views of the United Way that may have stemmed from the controversy involving William A. Aramony, former president of the United Way of America, said George Hearn, president of the United Way of the Bluegrass.

The controversy earlier this year involved charges of misappropriation of funds by the former president.

Aramony was dismissed from his post after being charged with padding his salary.

Local officials have made it a point to assure the public that the problems in the national organization have been dealt with accordingly.

"The message is that (the national organization) has cleaned up its act," said Bob Clay, residence hall director and vice chairman of the United Way committee for student giving.

United Way of the Bluegrass, along with local United Way organizations nationwide, withheld dues and called for reform after this summer's controversy. In addition to replacement of the president, the national board was slashed by fifty members and members of local boards nationwide were added.

Local members will give the national board ideas to better serve the communities.

Bluegrass and University United Way officials are confident that, despite the problems, everything has been corrected.

"We anticipate a good campaign with a minimum of problems," Hearn said. The biggest problem will probably be the local economy because many companies have downsized, merged or moved, he said.

"If someone wants to try to punish the United Way of America, then they are just hurting the people of the Bluegrass, who are in as much need as ever," Byars said.

"Students have been very supportive with their time and resources," Clay said. "The residence halls are quite supportive of the effort."

ments, including six former legislators, and seven guilty pleas with another expected.

According to state and federal records, Brown was pleaded guilty in Knox Circuit Court in November 1990 to cultivating marijuana for sale. He was sentenced to a year in prison. Brown went to jail on Nov. 9, 1990.

The indictment alleges that Smith solicited $3,750 from Mrs. Brown on Feb. 11, 1991, in gain for Smith's efforts to return an early parole for Brown.

Records show Brown, now 51, was paroled on April 9, 1991.

Parole Board Chairman John Runda said the case was not unusual because Smith had no serious criminal record, was sentenced to only a year and was facing federal criminal charges.

"This is not a heavy duty situation," Runda said.

spring 1994.

Two actions involving Robinson Forest also were decided at yesterday's meeting.

The board authorized leasing 45 percent of its interests in oil and gas rights on the 767-acre tract outside the main 10,000-acre block of the research forest in Eastern Kentucky.

The area, known as the Goff Tract, will be leased to a division of the Equitable Resources Energy Co., which will pay UK 12.5 percent production royalty and a fixed amount per acre for the rental.

Equitable's activities will not disturb Clemons Fork watershed, one of three streams in the forest. The forest's three streams are among the 29 cleanest in Kentucky.

The board also established of the Robinson Trust Quasi-Endowment. About $500,000 of the 1991-92 income from timber sales and coal royalties from the forest will be used initially to support the endowment. All income this school year from timber and coal sales will be used for the endowment.

yesterday:

"Former Gov. Edward T. 'Bud' Breathitt was elected the new chairman of the board. Breathitt was governor from 1963-67 and was then, by law, chairman of the UK board.

"I appreciate your confidence, and I'll do all in my power to preserve that confidence," Breathitt said to the board members, after being elected.

He was named to the board June 30 by Gov. Brereton Jones. Brethitt was named chairman on July 1 to finish the term of Lexington lawyer Foster Ockerman. The board elects a chairman annually in September.

"The board also elected Robert Meriwether vice chairman of the board. Meriwether, a Paducah physician, was appointed by Wilkinson in 1990. Lois Weinberg was elected secretary of the board.

"Trustees James Hardyman, James Rose, Billy Wilcoxson and Weinberg were elected to comprise the board's executive committee.

The executive committee exercises oversight of the business and financial interests of the board and has the same powers as the board between full board meetings.

"The trustees also authorized new by-laws for both the Lexington Community College and Jefferson Community College development councils.

New fraternity holding rush for next 2 weeks

Staff reports

Sigma Phi Epsilon social fraternity will hold an informational meeting today at 7 p.m. in 230 Student Center to recruit members.

The fraternity, which is returning to campus this fall, left several years ago when its national organization was displeased the chapter's image and dwindling number of members.

The chapter will be looking to fill about 30 slots, Interfraternity Council President Jeremy Bates said. For the next two weeks, chapter officials will hold interviews for all men interested in pledging.

collection and division of the gate receipts. Student volunteers would assist in ticket-taking and would aid two professional, uniformed security guards, provided by the hockey club, in keeping the crowd in control.

The Ice Center announced in July that it would not renew the contract that allowed the Cool Cats to play home games at the Center because of the uncontrolled behavior of the team and its fans. LIC management said it wanted the University to take responsibility for the club and its home games.

When the UK Athletics Association had no interest in making hockey a varsity sport and Campus Recreation officials said they could not afford to take on any more responsibility than giving the Cool Cats club sport status, the hockey club began making plans to play its entire season on the road.

But negotiations resumed last week when the Wesley Foundation offered to help. The Foundation and the club have worked out a proposal and now are negotiating the minor details of the proposal with the Ice Center, Moore said.

Shupe said that the Cool Cats are going to play a full home schedule this season, beginning with DePaul, but the question remains as to where those games will be played.

If the Ice Center does not accept the terms of the proposal, then the hockey club plans to play its home schedule at the Alpine Ice Arena in Covington, Ky., this season. Shupe said the Cool Cats do not have a contract with Alpine but that the arena's management "was very, very interested in supporting hockey and willing to work with us on the details."

Shupe said the club's preference is to solve its problems with the Lexington Ice Center and play its games on a Lexington rink.

"an incredible period in the University's history."

"He had the leadership ability and the ability to fund," Oberst said. "It was really a great four years that he had."

Though Oswald, who came to UK from the University of California, initiated most of the new plans, the former president said it would have been difficult to enact those plans without Breathitt.

"When you make a lot of change, you're going to cause some flack, especially when you're new from a different state," Oswald said. "You need all the support and encouragement you can get. Gov. Breathitt certainly gave very much of that."

Those who worked with Breathitt during his first term as chairman said he had the perfect temperament for the job.

"He's certainly not impetuous or easily excited," Cochran said. "He's calm, straightforward and pretty easy-going."

"He's one of the nicest men I've ever run across," said Ralph Ange-lacci, vice chairman of the board during Breathitt's term.

After his term as governor ended, Breathitt continued to be involved in higher education. He was appointed by former Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. to serve a short term on the UK board before being named to the state Council on Higher Education. He also worked for the Southern Regional Education Board.

He, along with former Gov. Louie Nunn, was appointed to the Morehead State University and Kentucky State University boards of regents to resolve lingering leadership conflicts at the institutions.

Gov. Breerton Jones appointed Breathitt, along with six other new members, to the UK board June 30. The openings on the board were created by a law reconstituting all the public higher education governing boards in the state.

For years, higher education advocates lamented governors' using board seats as political plums. Accusations of decisions railroaded from Frankfort were not uncommon as presidents came and left.

The latest political trustees controversy was the self-appointment of former Gov. Wallace Wilkinson to the UK board.

Breathitt said the new board will be able to put the sometimes-rocky history of the old board behind.

"I don't tend to dwell on what happened in the past," he said. "I think now the board is united. I think there's a real strong feeling of unity and support for (UK) President (Charles) Wethington."

Breathitt said he wants the board to give full backing to Wething-ton's agenda. The former governor said his job as chairman is to support, not create, that agenda.

"I think the role of the chairman of the board is to support the president and the administration," he said. "I don't think it's the role of the board to try and run the institution. It provides oversight."

"If the president and the administration aren't doing their jobs, then it's the role of the board to try and find a new president. But until that time, you've got to let the president and the University family run it."

Breathitt said his goals for the board this time around include seeing the completion of the proposed central library, enriching the faculty, upgrading non-revenue sports and eliminating racism on campus.

Current campus administrators said they believe Breathitt will make an excellent chairman.

"Gov. Breathitt's a very active, supportive person who really cares about this University," said Robert Hemenway, chancellor for the Lexington Campus. "I think the general feeling of most people is that he's an excellent choice to lead the board and we're honored and privileged to have him."

Oswald, who said he is still close friends with Breathitt, said UK's trustees could not have chosen a better chairman.

"I'm delighted," he said. "This bodes well for UK."

Networks begin frantic fall selection of television shows

A grand total of 34 new shows either have premiered or will premiere as a part of the four (yes, four) — including a more ambitious Fox) major networks. Look for reviews of those fine new shows right here in your Gateway To Hollywood's Glistening Stars, the Kentucky Kernel.

For the first time in many years, I actually find myself pleasantly surprised by the choices being offered. Granted, because any new TV season goes 0-for-30 or 1-for-30 in the typical year, three or four decent shows out of the whole shebang would be a step up. And this year, that seems possible.

After seeing just two new shows, I can report one show that has possibilities.

Some critics have called "Covington Cross" a medieval "Bonanza." That's not totally untrue. "Bonanza" is about a widower with three sons who lives on an Old West ranch. "Covington Cross" is about a widower with three sons and a daughter who lives in an English castle during the Middle Ages. Unfortunately for "Cross," the similarities stop there.

"Bonanza" was a well-written, entertaining western with well-drawn characters and interesting stories. "Covington Cross" is unintentionally amusing, with hairstyles and dialogue straight out of the 1990s. It's like watching a Mel Brooks movie with all the jokes taken out. Rather than being a medieval "Bonanza," it's a medieval "A-Team." The five good guys — complete with an out-of-place liberated daughter — rout the bad guys weekly. Stick around for a more realistic look at merry old England; the cartoon with Daffy Duck as Robin Hood springs to mind.

Toby Gibbs
Kernel Columnist

A Fox sitcom called "Flying Blind" premiered last Sunday night. The story of a recent college graduate who goes to work with his father at a food products company, this program has promise.

It's certainly not the funniest show I've ever seen, but the writing is fast-paced and witty enough to make it worth a half hour of your time. The acting, especially by Corey Parker as the frazzled college grad, is top-notch. And, if you're a male member of our species, I think you'll especially enjoy a certain aspect of this program. Trust me.

There is also a host of shows that have yet to premiere that I'm looking forward to watching, mainly because of the stars' past track records or intriguing premises. To wit:

"Bob" is the newest CBS sitcom from one of the funniest men in TV history, Bob Newhart. Newhart wisely refuses to tamper with success. His last two classic sitcoms showcased his dry, low-key every-man coping with an insane world of bothersome lunatics. I'll be shocked if his third show, in which he stars as comic book artist Bob McKay, isn't one of the best shows of the year.

"Hearst Afire," despite a meaningless title, is a Washington D.C.-based sitcom starring Markie Post and John Ritter as aides to an elderly Southern senator. I like Post and Ritter, and I have faith that Linda Bloodworth-Thomason's writing can be as good as it is in her "Evening Shade" program. But her "Designing Women" has gone downhill. And can she juggle three shows without spreading herself too thin?

"I'll try 'Love And War,'" a sitcom created by Diane "Murphy Brown" English, though the premise promises little more than what we've seen a million times before: Mismatched lovers bicker and make up, then bicker and make up again. But because it's on between "Brown" and "Northern Exposure," it's sure to be a hit, no matter if it deserves to be. Still, with stars Jay Thomas and Susan Dey and some good writing, this could be a quality show.

"I'm more excited about "Mad About You," a newlywed sitcom starring Paul Reiser and Helen Hunt. Some critics have described it as "Seinfeld Gets Married." High praise indeed. And, because it follows "Seinfeld," it should get decent ratings, assuming it really is in the "Seinfeld" vein.

"A pair of Fox half-hour variety shows — "The Edge" and "The Ben Stiller Show" — will air on weekends. The network struck gold with

"In Living Color" two years ago. Among cast members, I'm only familiar with Julie Brown (of MTV fame) from "The Edge."

"Whoops!" is a Fox sitcom about the only six survivors of a nuclear holocaust. No, that wasn't a typo. It's about the only six people in the world to survive an accidental nuclear war. Fox sitcoms tend to be of one extreme or the other — either witty and outrageously daring (like "The Simpsons") or insulting and filled with cartoonish joke-tellers (like "Down The Shore" and "Stand By Your Man"). I'll wait and see where this one lands.

"Likely Suspects" goes a step beyond the typical cop show or murder mystery. You play a rookie cop whose perspective is that of the camera. Sam McMurray (of "The Tracy Ullman Show") is a grizzled veteran helping you look for clues to solve the case. If the show is as good as its premise, it could become a cult hit.

The rest of the TV line-up seems to be nothing but a sea of rip-offs of other shows. Take your pick of "90210" clones, "Northern Exposure" clones or "America's Most Wanted" clones.

So, there are eight shows I'm looking forward to at least sampling in the next few weeks. And some of them might surprise me and be lovely. But even if the networks go just 3-for-34, TV would still deserve the Most Improved Player Award.

Ugly Kid Joe made up of Mark Davis, Klaus Eichstadt, Dave Fortman, Whitfield Crane, and Cordell Crockett are welcoming fans to their neighborhood on their Polygram record debut.

Ugly Kid Joe's major-label debut lashes out at neighbors

Ugly Kid Joe
America's Least Wanted
Polygram Records

By Brian Manley
Contributing Critic

With the release of their multi-platinum EP As Ugly As They Wanna Be, Ugly Kid Joe has gained the reputation of a hard-edged band whose heavy riffs and sarcastic lyrics are laced with the group's own twisted brand of humor.

America's Least Wanted, the band's debut LP on a major label, not only builds on that reputation but adds to it the fact that Ugly Kid Joe is beginning to echo out a unique sound — a sound the group can call its own.

Ugly Kid Joe's greatest assets on America's Least Wanted are creativity and attitude. The group, for the most part, tends to shy away from typical cliché-ridden pop metal songs that deal with partying and relationships. Lead singer Whitfield Crane's sarcastic attitude is present, as he takes aim at subjects ranging from rude neighbors to homelessness.

Overall, the band has managed to develop itself more on this album than on its previous EP — especially in the area of songwriting. The focus seems to be more on melody than obnoxiousness, and the album displays a sense of diversity not present on As Ugly As They Wanna Be.

Guitarists Klaus Eichstadt and Dave Fortman have laid down a heavier, more groove-oriented and (dare I say it) grungier sound. Their rhythms are, at times, akin to the distorted slow tempo riffs of Soundgarden ("Panhandling Prince," "So Damn Cool") and, at others, similar to the funky beats of the Red Hot Chili Peppers ("Same Side," "I'll Keep Tryin'"). Eichstadt and Fortman seem to specialize in churning out licks that may not be the most difficult pieces to play — but are fun to listen to and display a refreshing sense of creativity.

Crane's voice is versatile, ranging from smooth and melodious ("Mr. Recordman") to a growl ("Goddamn Devil," which also features Rob Halford on guest vocals).

The band included its earlier hit singles "Everything About You" and "Madman" on the CD, as well — no doubt because of pressure from Polygram — in hopes of increasing sales. Polygram also has taken the liberty of censoring some of the lyrics, so as not to offend any listeners.

Two surprises are the acoustic ballads "Busy Bee" and "Mr. Recordman." Both are very different from anything Ugly Kid Joe has penned in the past. Neither song falls into the trap of sounding like the required "love songs" most metal bands seem to feel obligated to attaching to a record to get airplay.

The most disappointing song is the cover of Harry Chapin's "Cats in the Cradle." The song isn't done badly. It just doesn't fit Ugly Kid Joe's style.

The first single from the album is "Neighbor," a guitar-driven track that is filled with likable vocal melodies and humorous lyrics. If the band continues to improve, as it has on this album, they could become a respected act in the industry, like the Red Hot Chili Peppers and Faith No More.

Although the lyrics may not be poetry and the guitar work not virtuosic, America's Least Wanted will appeal to many — from hardcore fans to the average, uh, Joe.

Restoration of Welles' film 'Othello' makes U.S. debut

By Chip Sebastian
Staff Writer

The bard strikes again. "Othello" was released in 1951 in Europe — but never in the United States.

Orson Welles directed, produced and played the lead in this version of William Shakespeare's tale, which opened Friday night at the Kentucky Theatre.

After wading through the previews, the audience's attention shifts to the opening scene — a funeral march for both a black man and a beautiful young girl. A dirge fills the background score, limited by the poor quality soundtrack — the only setback to "Othello."

In the opening scene, a man is put in a cramped cage swinging from a 100-foot tower. He looks like a really unhappy bad guy. The scene is set. Unfolding how this came to be, Welles tells the story with a trimmed-down script that keeps every necessity.

"Othello" is a film of Moroccan origin. Welles entered it as such in the 1952 Cannes film festival, where it won best picture.

Welles plays the Moor with an incredible lustiness, filling the screen with his barrel chest.

His character is a foil to Suzanne Cloutier's Desdemona. She brings to the role all of the chastity and innocence it demands.

Michael MacLiammoir gives a conventional, but effective, Iago. Driving Othello to self-destruction becomes his only objective.

Othello, believing Iago's claims of Desdemona's impurity, takes her life. Then he takes his own life.

Most interesting is Welles' innovation in camera angles and lighting. The uses of shadows and bright lights through bedchambers and labyrinthine passages give incredible emotional response that stimulates the tragic.

Various uses of close-ups during the choke scene, makes the story come even more alive.

Working with a succession of cinematographers like Anichise Brizzi, George Fanto, Obadiah Troania and Robert Fusi, Welles shows his masterwork in the handling of the different shots required for so delicate a project.

Done at the beginning of his European stint and at the height of his creativity, it has been held by some to even surpass "Citizen Kane," the film for which he is most famous.

Welles had done a version of "Macbeth" three years earlier, which was good in its handling of the lingo but not near the strength of this piece.

In 1965, Welles would direct and play Falstaff in what would become his favorite of his films, "Chimes at Midnight." This drew characters from several Shakespeare plays.

"Othello" was filmed for the BBC in 1982, starring Anthony Hopkins.

A version was taped in 1965 starring Laurence Olivier. And even as far back as 1922, Emil Jannings played the role in a silent version. An opera was written by Verdi and filmed by Franco Zeffirelli in 1986.

Brought back to the big screen after being suppressed for years and missing an original negative, the soundtrack was rerecorded and remastered in digital stereo at Universal.

The Chicago symphony orchestra and the Chicago lyric opera were called in to help replace the sound on his masterpiece.

"Othello" is unrated and is showing at the Kentucky Theatre through Thursday.

Values not an issue, but a smoke screen in presidential race

EDITORIAL

Values. The mere mention of the word evokes many different images for many different people. This year the word "values" has become the object of heated debate in many dining rooms, workplaces, classrooms and presidential campaigns.

Is family values an issue for a presidential campaign? Despite the time that the Republicans and Democrats are giving the nebulous subject, it is not.

Family values became an issue when Vice President Dan Quayle criticized television sitcom character Murphy Brown for having a child out of wedlock. Quayle chose a poor example at which to direct his comments. A two-parent family is the ideal situation in which a child can be raised. However, children brought up by one parent aren't "illegitimate," as the conservatives claim.

There is a related issue out there — somewhere. But it involves mothers on welfare having more children to get more money from the government. Were Murphy Brown a real life person, she certainly wouldn't be on welfare.

Family values is a misnomer, a non-issue. The country's many social ills, like abuse, racism and drugs, are issues that need to be addressed in this election.

UK students know as well as anyone that funding for our nation's schools also is a major concern — not to mention the troubled state of our economy.

Both President Bush and Bill Clinton need to rise above the family values smoke screen and face the real issues.

Other national troubles should be addressed, too

Presidential campaigns are getting out of control. Costing billions of dollars, the popularity contest dwindles into a mud-slinging battle. Presidential candidates wind up throwing little pieces of each other's pasts to the press like raw meat before a lion. All this mud-slinging often confuses the issues at hand and diverts the campaign on tangents.

Since Vice President Dan Quayle spoke about "Murphy Brown," President Bush's campaign has become centered around family values. This is a touchy topic to many moral Americans.

It is a terrible topic for a politician to cover for two reasons. First, it is slippery ground. No matter what a politician says, there will be someone who disagrees. Second, it is not a governmental issue. The reason the United States was created was because of the English government's forcing its beliefs and morals upon its citizens. This strictness caused the citizens to flee, searching for something better.

Discussion about family values is almost impossible. Before any discussion truly can take place, one must define "family." Can two gay men and an adopted child be considered a family? Or a single mother with a child, is that a family? Family is a hazy term to define. In the '90s the "traditional family" — with dad working and mom taking care of the kids — is uncommon.

Krista Gibler
Kernel Columnist

Granted, there are too many family problems in the country. However, the government has little influence over this, directly. If the government were to help with unemployment and the recession, unemployed or struggling families would have one less problem to reconcile.

Finances, at least in my family, create some of the largest arguments. And once arguments start, it's all downhill.

Our government was created in an effort to provide safety and security for its citizens, not to meddle in their private family matters. When the presidential campaign focuses on this as a prime issue, the candidates are infringing on our personal rights.

Krista Gibler is a journalism sophomore and Kentucky Kernel contributing columnist.

Government shouldn't raise our children

Family values. Be prepared to hear these two words a lot during the next couple of months because it seems within these words we will determine who our next president will be.

I have a problem with the above. These two words should have no bearing on who we will choose in this election year.

I agree with President George Bush and the Republicans when they call for stronger family values. Having a family that cares for its young and teaches them how to be good, successful people can only help our nation. But it's 1992 and the majority of families in the United States do not consist of a husband, wife, three children — and a dog in the backyard.

Today's typical family is composed of a home in which there is one parent who usually works. The Republicans make it sound as if children aren't raised in the "traditional" family home, they are, in effect, not being raised properly.

Brant Welch

I was raised in a single-parent home. And, though my mother worked long hours and wasn't always at home, she taught me many strong values. I got enough love from her, as well as from my father and grandparents, that I made my way through trying times and have turned out to be a pretty good person. I think having the "traditional" family doesn't guarantee success. I just want to know how having strong family values will help cut a $350 billion deficit, curb unemployment and cure environmental problems?

And how will Bush implement these family values to the masses? Is he going to pass laws banning divorce? Is he going to require parents to sit down and preach value lessons to their children each night? Hey, maybe he'll give everyone family-values textbooks we can use as guidelines.

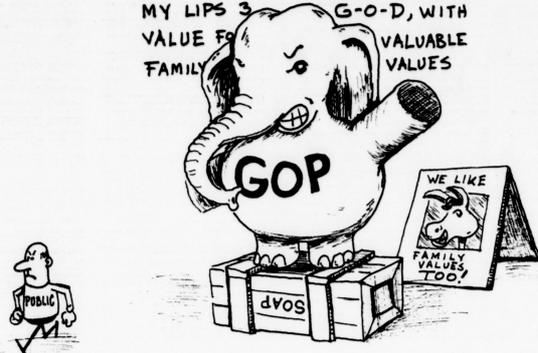

Bush said he will "reform the welfare program to encourage families to stick together and have fathers stick around and do what they ought to." Yes, the welfare program needs to be reformed but that won't change the family structure. A mother or father's decision on what to do if he or she has a child won't hinge on how the welfare program works. Those de-isions most likely have been made long before conception.

Again, I agree that loving your children and teaching them values like loving and respecting all humanity can help our country. But a politician cannot do anything to make families do this. That is something a family must take the initiative to do itself.

Bush hasn't even defined what he thinks strong family values are. The Republicans who have tried were evasive or have contradicted themselves. Bush's values may differ from mine or yours. They probably differ from most of his contemporaries. It's not his job to tell us how to raise our families. It's still hard for me to believe the Republicans have used family values as an issue on which to run a campaign. I guess I shouldn't be

VIEWPOINTS

ON FAMILY VALUES

President must preserve family

Do family values belong in a Presidential election? Both President George Bush and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton have forced this issue into the campaign so we have no real choice — if "values" are all they will both talk about openly and honestly.

At first glance, candidates' value systems may not appear to affect directly their abilities to prepare budgets, appoint Supreme Court Justices or make daily decisions necessary to run a country — but values do play a major role.

When the president prepares his budget he has to decide if, and just how much, money will go toward funding abortions, task forces looking at the needs of the homosexual community and whether child support skippers are punished.

The president also is responsible for submitting candidates for the Supreme Court. Ultimately, it's the Court that decides if such "alternative lifestyles" are acceptable and if abortion should remain legal, as well as whether condoms should be given out in primary schools. The court also has the tedious task of defining the role, or lack thereof, of religion in public schools and government.

These are all matters that are influenced by a person's personal values.

Last month at the Republican National Convention in Houston, many people criticized platform speakers like Pat Buchanan and Pat Robertson. Why? They were criticized for promoting things like heterosexual families with two active parents, celibacy before marriage, the presence of religion in the home and allowing voluntarily prayer in our schools. Are these ideas so terrible?

It is understandable that, while, ideologically, all families should have two parents taking an interest in their children's lives, it doesn't always happen. Divorce is a fact of life we must all live with; however, rampant divorce or the birth of children out of wedlock should not be encouraged. But these events happen.

Religion also is going to appear in public schools, no matter if we don't want it there. The people who cry to preserve a person's right to choice concerning abortion are the same people who take away a person's right to say a silent prayer in a public school.

Both President Bush and Clinton have used family values as an issue in their bids for the White House. Vice President Quayle has been the most vocal supporter of "traditional family values." Quayle started this national obsession with family values when he attacked the sitcom character Murphy Brown for having a child out of wedlock.

Joe Braun
Editorial Editor

While his message was misdirected toward a fictional character, it is a message that needs to be heard. The Democrats, and even some Republicans in Congress, have been crying for policies directed at providing family leave from the workplace.

Families must be preserved in our nation, whether they consist of single parent or two heterosexual parents, they must stay in tact. National legislation and policy-making can set the standards for a whole nation.

The president is the person who represents the needs and the feelings of the whole country. If he doesn't take a stand on these issues, they'll get worse.

In voting, we must select a president who promotes the ideals we want in our own families. While other issues like the environment, the economy and social infrastructure troubles are also important, family hits home first.

Editorial Editor Joe Braun is a political science and journalism sophomore and a Kentucky Kernel columnist.

ON THE ISSUES

★ ★ Election '92 ★ ★

Should parents be able to decide which public schools their children attend? Should they be able to send their children to private schools at public expense?

BUSH

"I firmly believe that parents, not government, should make the important decisions in their children's lives. That's why my state and local G.I. Bill for children gives low- and middle-income families $1,000 scholarships to help send their children to the schools of their choice — private, public or religious. My approach permits the same choice we now give our college students, an approach that has strengthened all our universities — public, private and religious."

"As president I would work with states to develop public school choice programs like the one I created in Arkansas. I do not, however, support using our limited public resources to pay for private education."

The Kentucky Kernel will be presenting both candidates' views daily on various issues until the election.

so surprised, they did a pretty good job of running on the flag in '88.

An election should be run on a stronger base. We need to ask our candidates what they are going to do about certain issues other than the family and abortion. The public and the media have been too soft on the candidates. We need more information from them. After watching hours of television coverage and reading countless articles about the election, I know little about what the candidates represent as a whole. It is because the election has been broken down into these simple issues.

What we need to find out from Bush is what he is going to do to win the drug war, improve education and get the economy under control. Not his critique of our family values.

Coach cost Irish vital time when he forgot rule change

Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Precious seconds slipped away while Lou Holtz talked tactics with Rick Mirer, forgetting a rule change that starts the clock after a penalty.

"I don't think I've made that dumb a mistake on the sidelines in years," the Notre Dame coach said yesterday.

Fifteen wasted seconds ran off before Mirer dashed back to throw a sideline pass out of bounds to Lake Dawson. The clock left the Irish with seven seconds — too little time, too deep in Michigan territory.

The game Saturday ended in a 17-17 tie, the most notorious for the Irish since 1966 when No. 1 Notre Dame and No. 2 Michigan State tied 10-10.

Holtz defends his play calling in the final, failed series, but not his mental lapse.

"I know they changed the rule two years ago," he admits. "I know that today. I knew that Saturday before the game. But I can't tell you why I did not know the clock was running."

Michigan had pushed deep into Notre Dame territory with little more than a minute left. Holtz expected to lose by a touchdown or at least a field goal.

Then Elvis Grbac threw the ball into Jeff Burris's hands at the Notre Dame 14, and with 1:05 remaining the Irish had a chance to win.

Holtz immediately identified a problem. Both punt snappers were injured and a substitute had literally rolled the ball across the grass to the punter.

"There was no way we were going to punt the football," Holtz said.

So Jerome Bettis ran seven yards, and with 35 seconds left Reggie Brooks ran for short yardage. But a procedure penalty brought the ball back. Holtz's mind slipped the tracks.

"I expected the clock to be stopped for a first down, then you go from there," he said.

"The penalty is where I drew a blank," he said, expecting the clock to stop, then start with the snap.

Holtz envisioned a different ending, one that might have muffled the critics if not brought the Irish a victory.

Men's, women's soccer teams face Transy in 'Rage in Cage'

By John Kelly
Sports Editor

Transylvania makes the short commute to Cage Field today to face the winless UK men's soccer team in the appropriately named "Rage in the Cage" at 5 p.m.

UK (0-2-1) may be winless in three games, but coach Sam Wooten said that record is misleading, considering the caliber of UK's competition thus far. UK has lost to Division I soccer powers Indiana and Evansville on the road and tied up-and-comer Wright State at Cage Field.

"I look at the rest of our schedule, and I think we're gonna do well this season," Wooten said. "That's not to take away from the rest of the teams we play, we just started against some very good competition."

While Transy isn't the power that IU or Evansville is, Wooten said it always creates the most exciting game atmosphere of the season. That's a combination of the fans (usually the largest crowd of the year) and the intense nature of the game itself.

"Transy and UK has always been a big rivalry," Wooten said. "It dates all the way back to the club days."

Wooten said Transylvania (2-2) is a young team but that he never expects to win any game, especially one with such a big cross-town rivalry.

"Transy is always good," he said. "And the game will be very physical, very intense and very emotional."

The game should start at about 5 p.m. It will follow the women's soccer game against Lindsey Wilson, which is scheduled for 2 p.m. This will be the first of four such doubleheaders.

Wooten said that, in future seasons, UK plans to play more home doubleheaders and will try to schedule some doubleheaders on the road. Even though the game is early, it should benefit from some of the overflow from the UK-Transy game and that is exactly what Wooten wants.

"It will be an opportunity for a lot of people to see the women's soccer program, and they are exciting," Wooten said. "A lot of people will tell you that women's sports aren't exciting because they think that women are slower and can't do things that men can.

"But in soccer, the women do a lot of same things that the men do — the same moves and tackles and things — and sometimes better than the men. This team is exciting."

UK (3-2) will look to work on minor fundamental improvements, a theme that is dominant in first-year coach Warren Lipka's master plan.

"We're looking to improve each and every game," Lipka said. "We've been very successful against some tough competition. We barely lost to Arkansas, which is ranked 18th in the nation."

"I'm more happy than I am surprised."

Students will be admitted to the games at Cage Field free of charge with a validated student ID card.

Sherrill apologizes for incident

Associated Press

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Jackie Sherrill apologized yesterday for a controversial bull castration in front of his Mississippi State football team, and the school's president promised such an incident would not occur again.

"Even though I was not involved in the procedure that took place, I take responsibility," Sherrill told his weekly news conference. "If this incident was in any way not perceived as proper by those who love Mississippi State, then I apologize."

"If it caused any hardships to anyone here at the university, then I am sorry."

The bull was castrated in front of the team on a practice field in Starkville before Mississippi State defeated the Texas Longhorns 28-10 on Sept. 5. Later, Sherrill said he allowed the procedure because it was educational and motivational.

MSU President Donald Zacharias said yesterday he had met with Sherrill and athletic director Larry Templeton and "explained that I consider the action inappropriate and contrary to the educational ideals" of the university.

John Harkness, associate dean of Mississippi State's veterinary medicine school, had questioned the appropriateness of the castration on the practice field.

"It's my personal opinion that to do that procedure in that context causes me concern," Harkness said earlier. "Speaking for myself as a veterinarian concerned with the treatment of animals at Mississippi State, I think it was out of place."

Zacharias noted that Sherrill, whose team is 1-1 and ranked No. 24, had apologized.

"I am confident that nothing like this will occur in the future," Zacharias said. "And I apologize to our fans and the university community for any embarrassment they may have experienced."

"Mississippi State faculty and staff have attained a stringently governed national accreditation to work with thousands of research and laboratory animals each year, and we work very hard to ensure their appropriate and humane treatment," Zacharias said.

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $277 each month to reach the same goal.

Start planning your future. Call our Enrollment Hotline 1 800 842-2888.
